HOW NEWTON IS GOVERNED

Fourth of a Series of Articles Explaining the Management of the City

One of the least understood and most abused departments of the city that in charge of the board of health. It is blamed for all the ills of municipal administration and is never praised. Its work is based on the self evident truth that the well being of the whole must be considered as paramount to that of the individual and it may be censured by the latter, it certainly deserves the kind thoughts of the community at large. The modern tendency of concentrating population in our cities has emphasized by severe and costly lessons, the extreme importance of sanitary regulations. The family of the rich in mansions, grossly deceive themselves if they imagine they are above the general welfare of the people community. Matters of health sanitation, like the strength of a lin, are no stronger than its weak point, and it can be truly said that the health of a town depends upon the sanitary condition of its poorest districts.

The board of health of Newton is composed of three citizens appointed, not pay, by the mayor, to serve most of our other city officials, doing good behavior. One of these gentlemen must be a physician. Our is especially fortunate in the fact that the chairman of the board, Dr. Francis Geo. Curtis, has served in that capacity for 20 years. It is not too much to say that the high standing of the board has attained not only in results of its work locally, but in reputation in the state and country mostly due to the initiative and active ability of Dr. Curtis.

The other members of the board, Mr. William F. Harbach and John C. Madril, have not served as long as Dr. Curtis, but are equally devoted to the interest, and have a wide acquaintance with its needs.

The executive work of the board is aided by its clerk and agent, Mr. M. Russell, assisted by a sanitary inspector and a stenographer. The work of the department is seemingly endless, covering as it does, such subjects as the quarantine, inspection disinfection for all kinds of communicable diseases, the maintenance of bacteriological department for examination of disease bacilli, medical section of school children, the investigation and correction of a thousand kinds of nuisances, the collection of house garbage, inspection of provisions, the inspection of dairies, milk cans, and bakeries, the prevention of crowding in tenements, the licensing of stables, cattle, live fowl, sheep, swine, and the connection of sewers with the sewer, the construction and cleaning of privies and cesspools, the care of the city bath houses, licensing of hawkers and peddlers and the oversight of burial places.

Communicable Diseases

That may be considered the first of the health department is the section of the public from the midst of those diseases which are known to be communicable from one person to another. The most important in this city being diphtheria, scarlet fever, consumption and typhoid fever. Measles are also noted, and there is always a fear that the dread scourge of the 18th century, small pox, may again show itself.

Notices of these dangerous diseases are sent to the office of the board by the attending physician, or parents under severe penalties for neglect.

As a usual thing, Newton physicians heartily co-operate with the board of health in this and other particulars. As soon as reports of diphtheria and scarlet fever are received, the agent visits the premises, places a suitable warning placard at all entrances to the house, and imposes such quarantine regulations as will insure the complete isolation of the patient from the public. Hospital treatment is urged in all cases, as most beneficial to the public as well as for the patient, and there is a growing tendency in this city to take advantage of the conveniences attached to our modern contagious wards and the excellent treatment given at the Newton Hospital. Where the case remains at home, the quarantine usually restricts entrance to the sick room to the physician and nurse, and often requires the removal of working members of the family from the house. School attendance is of course prohibited from children of the family, unless they leave the premises, and even then during a probationary period of suspicion. The public has become fairly well acquainted with the need of quarantine and the regulations are usually faithfully observed. Severe penalties are attached, however, to their violation, as well as to the unauthorized removal of the warning placards.

When notified by the attending physician that the patient has recovered, the premises are visited by the physician to the Board, who takes culture in cases of diphtheria, and makes an examination of the body in cases of scarlet fever, and if the culture proves negative and the examination conclusive, the placards are removed.

For diphtheria cultures, the board maintains a laboratory, and culture tubes can be found at convenient stations all over the city. When a physician has a suspicious throat disease, he obtains one of these tubes and uses the swab on the throat or nose of the patient. It is then reenclosed in the tube and sent to the laboratory where it is placed in a gas oven for a number of hours. By this time the germs on the swab have developed on the culture media, which is of bullion composition, and are carefully treated and inspected through a microscope.

If found to be diphtheria bacilli, the culture is said to be positive, if other forms are found, the culture is negative and the physician and health office are notified accordingly. For release from diphtheria, two consecutive negative cultures from both throat and nose are required, the first taken by the attending physician and the record by the physician to the board, after a lapse of 24 hours. The quarantine for diphtheria usually lasts about 10 days, while that for scarlet fever has a minimum limit of five weeks. One week must also elapse after recovery before school attendance is permitted.

OLD RESIDENT DEAD

Fine Record of Capt. Joseph E. Cousens of Newton Centre

Captain Joseph E. Cousens, one of the oldest residents of this city, passed away yesterday afternoon at his home on Summer street, Newton Centre, after a long period of failing health. Captain Cousens was born in Lyman, Me., November 4, 1823, and first came to Newton in 1842, and became a permanent resident here in 1848, engaging in business as a carpenter and builder. Of the nine boys in his family, four of them enlisted in July 1862 for the Union side, joining Co. K, of the 32nd Massachusetts Volunteers, the Newton Company, for three years, and Joseph E. Cousens was made sergeant of the Company. At Gettysburg in July, 1863, while with Adjutant Isaac F. Kingsbury, assisting Col. Prescott from the field, he was wounded in the right arm. In January, 1864, he was promoted to Captain in the 54th Regiment, Infantry, Mass. Vols., one of the organizations of colored troops from this state and was constantly in command of his company in the department of the South, participating in engagements at James Island, July 16, 1864, Honey Hill, Nov. 30, 1864, and Boykins Mills, April 18, 1865. For a short period he performed provost duty and was mustered out with his regiment at Gallopis island, Boston Harbor, Sept. 1, 1865. Capt. Cousens returned to Newton Centre and resumed his business as a carpenter, in which he continued as long as he was able to work. He was a member of the First Church of Newton Centre and a comrade of Charles Ward Post, 62, G. A. R. on his own birthday, two years ago, he was presented with a gold badge came by comrades of that post and greatly appreciated the gift. Shortly afterwards he suffered a stroke of paralysis, which partially disabled him. The funeral will be held Sunday afternoon at two o'clock at his late residence on Summer street.

PECULIAR ACCIDENT

A Boston Elevated flat car loaded with gravel broke away from a service car about 1.50 P. M. Wednesday on the down grade of the Middlesex & Boston Street Railway track near Lake street station, Commonwealth avenue, and, smashing through the outer at the end of the track, plunged into the small structure used as a waiting room.

William Hazlett, starter for the Middlesex & Boston Road, who was standing near the waiting room and saw the runaway car coming, rushed into the waiting room and warned four men just in time to get them out before the wall would come tumbling down. The car stopped after crashing into the structure, but nobody was hurt.

The car has been used in bringing gravel from Auburndale to fill in a large field at Lake street through which a loop is being built by the Elevated for the new trailer cars.

The coupler that attached the gravel car to the service car broke during switching over into the field, and as the runaway had no brake and was on an incline it could be stopped only by the first object that happened in its way.

IN THE WAR ZONE

Letter from Newton Man Near the Battle Line

The following extracts are from a letter just received by Dr. Francis Geo. Curtis of Chestnut Hill from his son, who has been assisting the work of the American Relief Commission in Belgium for the past few months.

Bergen-op-Zoom, July 16, 1915. Here I am in a neutral country for the first time since April 20. On April 25 we took up work in northern France: St. Quentin was my station and I have been five weeks in charge of C. R. B. work there; during that time I have covered all the country between Valenciennes and Montmedy, naturally north of the line.

Two of us have been living in a splendid mansion (requisitioned for us by the owner) in company with a German officer who acted as general guardian angel. We had German soldiers as valets and servants, a German military car for our work, etc. Twice during our stay in St. Quentin the town was attacked by allied aeroplanes which scattered bombs broadcast; in one attack the bombs dropped within 200 yards of the house. I have been within 10 kilometres of the trenches, have witnessed a battle in the air and seen a Zeppelin destroyed by bombs from an aeroplane. We made a three day trip to Germany, to Trier, Coblenz, Bingen, down the Rhine to Köln, then back to St. Quentin. I sent you cards from Trier.

On June 1st I was recalled to Brussels to fill the place of Secretary left vacant by Mr. Galpin. Since then my work has been less exciting and more routine. I miss the stir, the bustle, the military atmosphere of St. Quentin, but I could not afford to miss the chance to fill Galpin's place. The C. R. B. is passing through a critical stage in its existence * * * as soon as definite decisions are reached and someone is found to take my place I shall make my plans to return. I feel that I have reached the highest place open to me as a delegate and unless matters take an unusual turn I shall soon come home.

I have had considerable news from students at the front and am sorry to report that many of my personal friends of Magdalen and other colleges are already on the roll of Honor. I must be across the border before dark and although I am full to overflowing with thoughts, which have been sent up within me for three months I must hold back till another day.

Edward.

THE KEITH MONUMENT

Handsome Shaft Recently Erected in the Newton Cemetery

The accompanying cut gives a good idea of the appearance of the monument recently erected at the Newton Cemetery in memory of the late Benjamin F. Keith, who died on March 26, 1914. The monument is on a beautiful lot of land on Main avenue, between the two lakes and is one of the finest locations in the cemetery.

The monument, which is about thirty-eight feet high, nine and one-half feet square, at base, is pure Greek Corinthian, after the Choric monument of Lyciscates at Athens, an example of the purest Greek art.

The monument was furnished by the C. E. Tayntor Granite Co. of New York, and is from the celebrated quarries of the Jones Brothers Company of Barre, Vt., who also manufactured and erected it in the cemetery.

OPEN AIR MEETING

Mr. Allan C. Emery will be the speaker at the Sunday afternoon meeting, August 8th, on the Y. M. C. A. lawn. Dr. Van Dyne will lead the singing and the orchestra will assist in the music. New song books have been secured. Come and enjoy the service.

At the show rooms of McKenney & Waterbury Co., Franklin St., Boston, corner Congress, are on exhibition the grandest display of Electric and Gas Fixtures, all lighted to show desired effect, to meet any requirements for homes and public buildings. The new Eventide Fixtures are shown in over one hundred styles.

FATAL FALL

With his skull fractured, both collarbones and both arms broken and an ankle sprained, 10-year-old Dominic Belbo of 16 Jones court, Newton, Tuesday walked more than 200 feet to summon aid. He had fallen 40 feet from a tree on the shore of Cook's pond, Watertown. He died while being taken to the Waltham Hospital.

Dominic was swinging among the highest branches of a willow tree when his weight broke a dead limb. He was alone, and, in spite of his fatal injuries, started out to find some one to take him to a hospital. George A. Moore of 24 Mt. Auburn street, Watertown, and William J. Mulvaney of 22 Marion street, Charlestown, passed him, riding in a wagon. They noticed the unusual manner in which he walked but thought he was playing.

"Look at the boy trying to imitate Charlie Chaplin," said Mulvaney. Moore turned to watch the boy and saw him fall to the ground, his face covered with blood. The men stopped the horse, placed the boy in the wagon and drove rapidly to the Waltham Hospital. The doctors there found that the child was dead.

By following the trail of blood the police traced the course of the boy back to Cook's Pond, where there was a broken limb from the willow tree 30 feet up. Beneath this was a disturbed spot in the ground.

For a long time his identity was not known, but inquiries made of the Newton police by the boy's mother, Mrs. Nicola Belbo of 16 Jones court, Nonantum, directed her to the Watertown police station. There she identified the cap he had worn, and later his body was given to her.

WOMAN IN THE HOME

The following remarks of Miss Florence Luscomb, one of the most brilliant speakers in the cause of Equal Suffrage in this state, will be of interest to friends of that cause.

"There is no better reason why the women of America should be given the ballot, than is contained in the little phrase, 'Woman's place is the home.' These words simply express this truth,—that whatever other interests they may have, the majority of American women have as their chief work in life the duties of homemakers and mothers. It has been given into the hands of the women of America to see that the homes are clean and fit places to live in, to care for the early training and education of the children, and to prepare the food supply of practically the entire nation. These tasks are so important that the safety and prosperity of the country depends upon the women having the power to do this work of theirs well. It is because women are beginning to realize that the welfare of their homes depends today not simply upon how well they do their individual work, but fully as much upon the way the laws are made as upon the way the laws are enforced, that hundreds of thousands of homemakers and mothers are asking for a voice in the making and enforcing of laws. Of what use is it for woman to be the best cook in the United States, if the meat that she buys is tainted before it reaches her hands? The inspection of our slaughter houses by the government determines whether or not we shall eat meat from tuberculous animals. The purity of our tomato catsup depends upon the passage and enforcement of our pure food laws, the enforcement of our sweatshop laws decides whether we shall buy scarlet fever along with our winter overcoat, and our drinking water is clean or dirty largely according as our politics are clean and dirty. Since everything that comes into the home today is tied up with politics and laws, women cannot make good homes unless they can also make good laws. The woman who is not willing to go to a polling booth once or twice a year and drop a little piece of paper in a box, for the better protection of her home, is shirking her responsibility in life. She is not only a poor citizen, but also a poor homemaker.

"Some men feel that by their votes they can adequately protect their families, but in practice this is not so. Nor is it the man's fault, it is simply because he cannot do all his work in the world and all the woman's work too. His work for thousands of years has been looking after the business and industrial side of life; hers, looking after the human side. However good his intentions, he cannot understand the needs of the home as well as his wife does, for he is out of it practically all of his waking hours. We see continually examples of the lack of the woman's point of view in our public affairs. Congress has just appropriated $164,000 for the Children's Bureau, which cares for the welfare of all the future citizens of the nation. The same Congress made an appropriation of $400,000 to fight hog cholera. If mothers had votes, do you think they would agree that the hogs were over twice as valuable as the babies? As one very wise woman has summed it up in a nutshell, 'The men know more than the women about some things, and the women know more than the men about some others, and the men and women together know all that is known about everything on earth.' I have never met anyone who could answer that; why in dealing with the affairs that concern everybody we would not be better off to use all the intelligence, all the morality, all the special experience and knowledge to be found.

"We have faith in the men of Massachusetts. We have faith to believe that if we can but reach the voters with our message, they will cast aside old prejudices, and will realize that they have nothing to fear and much to gain from the votes of their mothers, wives, and daughters. We believe that when this question comes to them to decide, the men of Massachusetts will be both just and generous, and will decide that the women of Massachusetts are intelligent enough, good enough, and public spirited enough to be made free, self-governing citizens of a free State. We look to you to give us Victory in 1915."

MANY "POINT WITH PRIDE"

In connection with the pilgrimage to the home of America's first suffragist, it is interesting to see that nowadays everyone who can show any connection with the early equal rights movement is finding it a source of pride.

"Something to be very proud of is the fact that the first woman on this side of the Atlantic who demanded the right to vote was a Catholic," says Mrs. Brent of Maryland, on Jan. 21, 1847," said the late Father Thomas Scully of Cambridge, Mass., at a legislative hearing. "I have always been proud that the first woman's rights convention in this country was held in a Methodist Church," says Bishop J. W. Hamilton. The Quakers point out that equal rights principles have prevailed among them from the very early days; that the wife of William Penn was for some time Acting Governor of Pennsylvania, and that Gov. Campbell of Wyoming, who signed the first equal suffrage bill in 1869, had been brought up under Quaker influence. Illinois boasts that it was the home of the first prominent public man in America to come out for woman suffrage—Abraham Lincoln, in 1836. And now comes a new and unexpected boast from the South, which has been looked upon as the special stronghold of conservatism on the woman question. A Confederate veteran in Georgia declares that the Wyoming Legislature of 1869 was made up largely of Confederate veterans from Gen. Price's army; that it was the old soldiers of the Confederacy who first gave votes to women in the West, and that they are going to do the same all through the South.

There are still laurels to be had for the plucking, in this equal suffrage movement; but the time is growing short. Those who want their children to show them with pride hereafter should gather them now, while the gathering is good.

PROBATION CRITICIZED

"The Common Law includes those principles, usages and rules of action applicable to the government and security of person and property, which do not rest for their authority upon any express and positive declaration of the will of the legislature," (Kent's Commentaries on American Law, v. 1, p. 471.)

"It was the application of the dictates of natural justice and of cultivated reason, to particular cases. In the language of Sir Mathew Hale, the common law of England is 'not the product of the wisdom of some one man, or society of men in any one age; but of the wisdom, counsel, experience and observation of many ages of wise and observing men.'" (Kent's Commentaries on American Law, v. 1, pp. 471-2.)

Then Judge Kent says: "It has been assumed by the Courts of Justice; or declared by Statute; with the like modification, as the Law of the Land in every state." (Kent's Commentaries on American Law, v. 1, p. 473.)

Boys of the ages of twelve to seventeen years form gangs, gather around our homes, insult us by every means known to them; break our fences; break windows, and do whatever they can to destroy "the security of persons and property." These gangs are legally all children, and their parents, hence, legally responsible for their work. The Common Law is bed rock binding upon parents. The General Assembly has neither the power nor right to make a "Probation Law," and thus exterminate the "Common Law." These gangs insult the residents, and the Police, under the "Probation" law, all around us; and the Police know no remedy. The Common Law is the remedy. Take the gangs by force, get the names and residences of the parents and take them away from the Sixth District Court, and into the Superior Courts, and force the work under the Common Law into action. Among these gangs are thieves; under the law of probation the Police are powerless. Forty (40) windows were broken in the house of one of my neighbors; nineteen (19) in another neighbor's; and six in our own home; the throwing of stones by these gangs is a daily work. Every morning I pick up in the streets around my home, the rubbish, mostly all brought by these gangs. Every day I pick up from 10 to 25 stones thrown by boys. This week I have picked up 130. The virtue of every girl is stripped from her, and every ruin is before her. All this is the result of the Probation Law. The General Assembly has no right whatever to enact a law which prevents or destroys the Common Law.

To show you what the word Probation means to them is best expressed in a little conversation which I overheard close by my home. A group of boys standing talking, one of whom has done something wrong. "Oh! chees it, here comes the cop." "Aw what do you care, he can't do anything to you; if he takes yer down, you'll get out on Probation. What do you care? That's nothing, we've all been down"—and of course they continue their wrong doing. Now what is the good of the patrolman? Where is his authority? Taken away by Probation! How are we to get Natural Justice which Chief Justice Kent says belongs to every man and woman in existence.

The Exploits of Elaine

A Detective Novel and a Motion Picture Drama

By ARTHUR B. REEVE
The Well-Known Novelist and the Creator of the "Craig Kennedy" Stories

Presented in Collaboration With the Pathe Players and the Electric Film Company
Copyright, 1914, by the Star Company All Foreign Rights Reserved

SYNOPSIS.

The New York police are mystified by a series of murders and other crimes. The principal clue to the criminal is the warning letter which is sent the victims, signed with a "clutching hand." The latest victim of the mysterious assassin is Taylor Dodge, the insurance president. His daughter, Elaine, employs Craig Kennedy, the famous scientific detective, to try to unravel the mystery. What Kennedy accomplishes is told by his friend James, a newspaper man. By an ingenious ruse Clutching Hand smuggles into Elaine's home a flask of liquid air which she supposes to be a package of valuable papers. It blows open the safe in which it is placed, but Kennedy arrives in time to prevent the robbery. The detective narrowly misses death in his apartment where Clutching Hand has placed a shot gun so that it is fired by the electrical connection formed when Kennedy places his hands on a framed photograph of Elaine.

FIFTH EPISODE

The Poisoned Room.

Elaine and Craig were much together during the next few days. Somehow or other, it seemed that the chase of the Clutching Hand involved long conferences in the Dodge library, and even, in fact, extended to excursions into the notoriously crime-infested neighborhood of Riverside drive, with its fashionable procession of automobiles and go-carts—as far north, indeed, as that desperate haunt known as Grant's tomb.

But to return to the more serious side of the affair.

Kennedy and Elaine had scarcely come out of the house and descended the steps, one afternoon, when a sinister face appeared in a basement area-way near by.

It was the Clutching Hand.

He wore a telephone inspector's hat and coat and carried a bag slung by a strap over his shoulder. For once he had left off his mask, but, in place of it, his face was covered by a scraggy black beard. The disguise was effective.

He saw Kennedy and Miss Dodge and slunk unobtrusively against a railing, with his head turned away. Laughing and chatting, they passed.

Then he turned in the other direction and, going up the steps of the Dodge house, rang the bell.

"Telephone inspector," he said in a loud tone as Michael, in Jennings' place for the afternoon, opened the door.

He accompanied the words with the sign, and Michael admitted him.

As it happened, Aunt Josephine was upstairs in Elaine's room. She was fixing flowers in a vase on the dressing table of her idolized niece. Meanwhile, Rusty, the collie, lay, half blinking, on the floor.

"Who is this?" she asked, as Michael led the bogus telephone inspector into the room.

"A man from the telephone company," he answered deferentially.

Aunt Josephine, unsophisticated, allowed them to enter without a further question.

Quickly, like a good workman, Clutching Hand went to the telephone instrument and by dint of keeping his finger on the hook and his back to Aunt Josephine succeeded in conveying the illusion that he was examining it.

No sooner was the door shut than the Clutching Hand hastily opened his bag and from it drew a small powder-spraying outfit, such as I have seen used for spraying bug powder. He then took out a sort of muzzle with an elastic band on it and slipped it over his head so that the muzzle protected his nose and mouth.

He seemed to work a sort of pumping attachment and from the nozzle of the spraying instrument blew out a cloud of powder which he directed at the wall.

Meanwhile, Michael, in the hallway, on guard to see that no one bothered the Clutching Hand at his work, was overcome by curiosity to see what his master was doing. He opened the door a little bit and gazed stealthily through the crack into the room.

Clutching Hand was now spraying the rug close to the dressing table of Elaine and was standing near the mirror. He stooped down to examine the rug.

Then, as he raised his head, he happened to look into the mirror. In it he could see the full reflection of Michael behind him, gazing into the room.

"The scoundrel!" muttered Clutching Hand, with repressed fury at the discovery.

He rose quickly and shut off the spraying instrument, stuffing it into the bag. He took a step or two toward the door. Michael drew back, fearfully, pretending now to be on guard.

Clutching Hand opened the door and, still wearing the muzzle, beckoned to Michael. Michael could scarcely control his fears. But he obeyed, entering Elaine's room after the Clutching Hand, who locked the door.

"Were you watching me?" demanded the master criminal, with rage.

Michael, trembling all over, shook his head. For a moment Clutching Hand looked him over disdainfully at the clumsy lie.

Then he brutally struck Michael in the face, knocking him down. An ungovernable, almost insane fury governed him to possess the man as he stood over the prostrate footman, cursing.

"Get up!" he ordered.

Michael obeyed, thoroughly cowed.

"Take me to the cellar, now," he demanded.

Michael led the way from the room without a protest, the master criminal following him closely.

Down into the cellar, by a back way, they went, Clutching Hand still wearing his muzzle and Michael saying not a word.

Suddenly Clutching Hand turned on him and seized him by the collar.

"Now, go upstairs, you," he muttered, shaking him until his teeth fairly chattered, "and if you watch me again—I'll kill you!"

He thrust Michael away, and the footman, overcome by fear, hurried upstairs. Still trembling and fearful, Michael paused in the hallway.

He put his hand on his face where the Clutching Hand had struck him. Then he waited, muttering to himself. As he thought it over, anger took the place of fear. He slowly turned in the direction of the cellar.

Meanwhile, Clutching Hand was standing by the electric meter. He examined it carefully, feeling where the wires entered and left it, and starting to trace them out. At last he came to a point where it seemed suitable to make a connection for some purpose he had in mind.

Quickly he took some wire from his bag and connected it with the electric light wires. Next, he led these wires, concealed, of course, along the cellar floor, in the direction of the furnace.

The furnace was one of the old hot air heaters and he paused before it as though seeking something. Then he bent down beside it and uncovered a little tank.

He thrust his hand gingerly into it, bringing it out quickly. The tank was nearly full of water.

Next from his capacious bag he took two metal poles, or electrodes, and fastened them carefully to the ends of the wires, placing them at opposite ends of the tank in the water.

For several moments he watched. The water inside the tank seemed the same as before, only on each electrode there appeared bubbles, on one bubbles of oxygen, on the other of hydrogen. The water was decomposing under the current by electrolysis.

Another moment he surveyed his work to see that he had left no loose ends. Then he quietly let himself out of the house.

The next morning Rusty, who had been Elaine's constant companion since the trouble had begun, awakened his mistress by licking her hand as it hung limply over the side of her bed.

She awakened with a start and put her hand to her head. She felt ill.

"Poor old fellow," she murmured, half dazedly.

Rusty moved away again, wagging his tail listlessly. The collie, too, felt ill.

"Why, Miss Elaine—what ees ze mattair? You are so pale!" exclaimed the maid, Marie, as she entered the room a moment later with the morning's mail on a salver.

"I don't feel well, Marie," she replied, trying with her slender white hand to brush the cobwebs from her brain. "I—I wish you'd tell Aunt Josephine to telephone Doctor Hayward."

"Yes, mademoiselle," answered Marie.

Languidly Elaine took the letters one by one off the salver.

Finally she selected one and slowly tore it open. It had no superscription, but it at once arrested her attention and transfixed her with terror.

It read:

"You are sick this morning. Tomorrow you will be worse. The next day you will die unless you discharge Craig Kennedy."

It was signed with the mystic trademark of the fearsome Clutching Hand!

Elaine drew back into the pillows, horror-stricken.

Quickly she called to Marie. "Go—get Aunt Josephine—right away!"

And Marie almost flew down the hall. Elaine seized the telephone and called Kennedy's number.

Kennedy, in his stained laboratory apron, was a work before his table, while I was watching him with interest, when the telephone rang.

Without a word he answered the call, and I could see a look of perturbation cross his face. I knew it was from Elaine, but could tell nothing about the nature of the message.

An instant later he almost tore off the apron and threw on his hat and coat. I followed him as he dashed out of the laboratory.

"This is terrible—terrible," he muttered, as he hurried across the campus of the university to a taxicab stand.

A few minutes later, when we arrived at the Dodge mansion, we found Aunt Josephine and Marie doing all they could under the circumstances.

Doctor Hayward had arrived and had just finished taking the patient's pulse and temperature as our cab pulled up.

Elaine was quite ill indeed.

"Oh! I'm so glad to see you," she breathed with an air of relief as Kennedy advanced.

"Why—what is the matter?" asked Craig anxiously.

Doctor Hayward shook his head dubiously, but Kennedy did not notice him, for, as he approached Elaine, she drew from the covers where she had concealed it a letter and handed it to him.

Craig took it and read:

"You are sick this morning. Tomorrow you will be worse. The next day you will die unless you discharge Craig Kennedy."

At the signature of the Clutching Hand he frowned, then, noticing Doctor Hayward, turned to him and repeated his question, "What is the matter?"

Doctor Hayward continued shaking his head. "I cannot diagnose her symptoms," he shrugged.

There seemed to be a faint odor, almost as if of garlic, in the room. It was unmistakable and Craig looked about him curiously, but said nothing.

As he sniffed, he moved impatiently and his foot touched Rusty, under the bed. Rusty whined and moved back lazily. Craig bent over and looked at him.

"What's the matter with Rusty?" he asked. "Is he sick, too?"

"Why, yes," answered Elaine, following Craig with her deep eyes.

Craig reached down and gently pulled the collie out into the room. Rusty crouched down close to the floor. His nose was hot and dry and feverish. He was plainly ill.

"How long has Rusty been in the room?" asked Craig.

"All night," answered Elaine. "I wouldn't think of being without him now."

"May I take Rusty along with me?" Craig asked finally.

Elaine hesitated. "Surely," she said at length. "Only be gentle with him."

"Of course," he said simply. "I thought that I might be able to discover the trouble from studying him."

We stayed only a few minutes longer, for Kennedy seemed to realize the necessity of doing something immediately, and even Doctor Hayward was fighting in the dark.

Back in the laboratory, Kennedy set to work immediately, brushing everything else aside. He began by drawing off a little of Rusty's blood in a tube, very carefully.

"Here, Walter," he said, pointing to the little incision he had made, "will you take care of him?"

Quickly Craig made one test after another.

As he did so I sniffed. There was an unmistakable odor of garlic in the air which made me think of what I had already noticed in Elaine's room. "Arsenuretted hydrogen," he answered, still engaged in verifying his tests. "This is the Marsh test for arsenic."

"Arsenic!" I repeated, in horror.

I had scarcely recovered from the surprise of Kennedy's startling revelation when the telephone rang again. Kennedy seized the receiver, thinking evidently that the message might be from or about Elaine.

But from the look on his face and from his manner, I could gather that, although it was not from Elaine herself, it was about something that interested him greatly.

"Good!" I heard him say finally. "I shall keep the appointment—absolutely."

"What was it?" I asked, eagerly.

"It was Elaine's footman, Michael," he replied, thoughtfully. "As I suspected, he says that he is a confederate of the Clutching Hand, and if we will protect him he will tell us the trouble with Elaine."

I considered a moment. "How's that?" I queried.

"Well, added Craig, 'you see, Michael has become infuriated by the treatment he receives from the Clutching Hand. I believe he cuffed him in the face yesterday. Anyway, he says he has determined to get even and betray him.'"

I did not like the looks of the thing, and said so. "Craig," I objected vehemently, "don't go to meet him. It is a trap."

Kennedy had evidently considered my objection already.

"It may be a trap," he replied slowly, "but Elaine is dying and we've got to see this thing through."

As he spoke, he took an automatic from a drawer of a cabinet and thrust it into his pocket. Then he went to another drawer and took out several sections of thin tubing, which seemed to be made to fasten together as a fishing pole is fastened, but were now separate, as if ready for traveling.

Then he went out. I followed, still arguing.

"If you go, I go," I capitulated.

"That's all there is to it."

Following the directions that Michael had given over the telephone, Craig led me into one of the toughest parts of the lower West side.

"Here's the place," he announced, stopping across the street from a dingy Raines law hotel.

"Pretty tough," I objected. "Are you sure?"

"Quite," replied Kennedy, consulting his notebook again.

Reluctantly I followed and we entered the place.

"I want a room," asked Craig as we were accosted by the proprietor, comfortably clad in a loud checked suit and striped shirt sleeves. "I had one here once before—forty-nine, I think."

"Fifty—" I began to correct.

Kennedy trod hard on my toes. "Yes, forty-nine," he repeated.

The proprietor called a stout negro porter, waiter and bell-hop all combined in one, who led us upstairs.

"Forty-nine, sah," he pointed out, as Kennedy dropped a dime into his ready palm.

The negro left us, and as Craig started to enter, I objected. "But, Craig, it was fifty-nine, not forty-nine. This is the wrong room."

"I know it," he replied. "I had it written in the book. But I want forty-nine—now. Just follow me, Walter."

Nervously I followed him into the room.

"Don't you understand?" he went on. "Room forty-nine is probably just knocked. The footsteps ceased. Then the door opened slowly and I could see a cold blue automatic.

"It's all right, Michael," reassured Craig calmly. "All right, Walter," he added to me.

The gun dropped back into the footman's pocket. We entered and Michael again locked the door. Not a word had been spoken by him so far.

Next Michael moved to the center of the room and, as I realized later, brought himself in direct line with the open window. He seemed to be overcome with fear at his betrayal and stood there breathing heavily.

"Professor Kennedy," he began, "I have been so mistreated that I have made up my mind to tell you all I know about this Clutching—"

Suddenly he drew a sharp breath and both his hands clutched at his own breast. He did not stagger and fall in the ordinary manner, but seemed to bend at the knees and waist and literally crumple down on his face.

We ran to him. Craig turned him over gently on his back and examined him. He called. No answer. Michael was almost pulseless.

Quickly Craig tore off his collar and bared his breast, for the man seemed to be struggling for breath. As he did so he drew from Michael's throat a small sharp-pointed dart.

"What's that?" I ejaculated, horror-stricken.

"A poisoned blowgun dart, such as is used by the South American Indians on the upper Orinoco," he said slowly.

He examined it carefully.

"What is the poison?" I asked.

"Curari," he replied simply. "It acts on the respiratory muscles, paralyzing them and causing asphyxiation."

The dart seemed to have been made of a quill with a very sharp point, hollow, and containing the deadly poison in the sharpened end.

"Look out!" I cautioned, as he handled it.

"Oh, that's all right," he answered casually. "If I don't scratch myself, I am safe enough. I could swallow the stuff and it wouldn't hurt me—unless I had an abrasion of the lips or some internal cut."

Kennedy continued to examine the dart until suddenly I heard a low exclamation of surprise from him. Inside the hollow quill was a thin sheet of tissue paper, tightly rolled. He drew it out and read:

"To know me is Death."

"Kennedy—Take Warning."

Underneath was the inevitable Clutching Hand sign.

We jumped to our feet. Kennedy rushed to the window and slammed it shut, while I seized the key from Michael's pocket, opened the door, and called for help.

A moment before, on the roof of a building across the street, one might have seen a bent, skulking figure. His face was copper colored and on his head was a thick thatch of matted hair. He looked like a South American Indian, in a very dilapidated suit of cast-off American clothes.

He had slipped out through a doorway leading to a flight of steps from the roof to the hallway of the tenement, and, like one of his native venomous serpents, worked his way down the stairs again.

My outcry brought a veritable battalion of aid. The hotel proprietor, the negro waiter and several others dashed upstairs, followed shortly by a portly policeman.

Craig took the policeman into his confidence, showing him the dart and explaining about the poison. The officer stared blankly.

"I must get away, too," hurried on Craig. "Officer, I will leave you to take charge here. You can depend on me for the inquest."

The officer nodded.

"Come on, Walter," whispered Craig, eager to get away, then adding the one word, "Elaine!"

I followed hastily, not slow to understand his fear for her.

Nor were Craig's fears groundless. In spite of all that could be done for her, Elaine was still in bed, much weaker now than before.

More than that, the Clutching Hand had not neglected the opportunity, either.

Suddenly, just before our return, a stone had come hurtling through the window, without warning of any kind, and had landed on Elaine's bed.

Below, as we learned some time afterwards, a car had drawn up hastily and the evil-faced crook whom the Clutching Hand had used to rid himself of the informer, "Limp Red," had leaped out and hastily hurled the stone through the window, as quickly leaping back into the car and whisking away.

Around the stone was wrapped a piece of paper on which was the ominous warning, signed as usual by the Hand:

"Michael is dead."

"Tomorrow, you."

"Then Kennedy."

"Stop before it is too late."

Elaine had sunk back into her pillows, paler than ever from this second shock.

It was just then that Kennedy and I arrived and were admitted.

"Oh, Mr. Kennedy," cried Elaine, handing him the note.

Craig took it and read. "Miss Dodge," he said, as he held the note out to me, "you are suffering from arsenic poisoning—but I don't know yet how it is being administered."

He gazed about keenly. Meanwhile, I had taken the crumpled note from him and was reading it. Somehow, I had leaned against the wall. As I turned, Craig happened to glance at me.

"For heaven's sake, Walter," I heard him exclaim. "What have you been up against?"

He fairly leaped at me and I felt him examining my shoulder where I had been leaning on the wall. Something on the paper had come off and left a mark on my shoulder. Craig looked puzzled from me at the wall. "Arsenic!" he cried.

He whipped out a pocket lens and looked at the paper. "This heavy, fuzzy paper is fairly loaded with it, powdered," he reported.

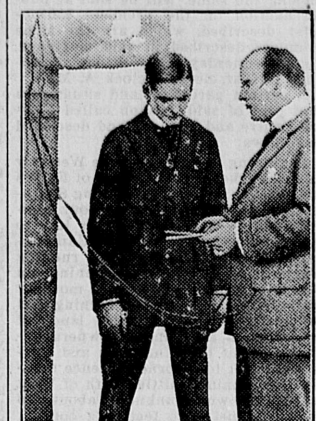

Kennedy paced the room. Suddenly, pausing by the register, an idea seemed to strike him.

"Walter," he whispered, "come down cellar with me."

"Oh! Be careful!" cried Elaine, anxiously for him.

"I will," he called back.

As he flashed his pocket bull's-eye about, his gaze fell on the electric meter. He paused before it. In spite of the fact that it was broad daylight, it was running. His face puckered.

"They are using no current at present in the house," he ruminated, "yet the meter is running."

He continued to examine the meter. Then he began to follow the electric wires along. At last he discovered a place where they had been tampered with and tapped by other wires.

"The work of the Clutching Hand!" he muttered.

Eagerly he followed the wires to the furnace and around to the back. There they led right into a little water tank. Kennedy yanked them out. As he did so he pulled something with them.

"Two electrodes the villain placed there," he exclaimed, holding them up triumphantly for me to see.

"Yes," I replied, dubiously, "but what does it all mean?"

"Why, don't you see? Under the influence of the electric current the water was decomposed and gave off oxygen and hydrogen. The free hydrogen passed up the furnace pipe and combining with the arsenic in the wall paper formed the deadly arseniuretted hydrogen."

He cast the whole improvised electrolysis apparatus on the floor and dashed up the cellar steps.

"I've found it!" he cried, hurrying into Elaine's room. "It's in this room—a deadly gas—arseniuretted hydrogen."

He tore open the windows.

"Have her moved," he shouted to Aunt Josephine. "Then have a vacuum cleaner go over every inch of wall, carpet and upholstery."

Standing beside her, he breathlessly explained his discovery. "That wall paper has been loaded down with arsenic, probably Paris green or Schweinfurth green, which is arseniuretted copper. Every minute you are here you are breathing arseniuretted hydrogen. This Clutching Hand is a diabolical genius. Think of it—poisoned wall paper!"

No one said a word. Kennedy reached down and took the two Clutching Hand messages Elaine had received. "I shall want to study these notes, more, too," he said, holding them up to the wall at the head of the bed as he flashed his pocket lens at them. "You see, Elaine, I may be able to get something from studying the ink, the paper, the hand writing—"

Suddenly both leaped back, with a cry.

Their faces had been several inches apart. Something had whizzed between them and literally impaled the two notes on the wall.

Down the street, on the roof of a carriage house, back of a neighbor's, might have been seen the uncouth figure of the shabby South American Indian crouching behind a chimney and gazing intently at the Dodge house.

As Craig had thrown open Elaine's window and turned to Elaine the figure had crouched closer to the chimney.

THE BROKEN CRANKSHAFT

That bearing "knock" in your engine will result in a broken crankshaft, broken crankcase, and broken cylinders besides necessitating a thorough overhauling and replacement of many new minor parts (if you don't have us remedy the "knock" now).

If your car's engine is noisy, seems to "knock", hasn't the full amount of power, etc.—see us for we're EXPERTS in engine work and our service is reasonable in cost.

Act NOW.

Mortgagee's Sale of Real Estate

BY VIRTUE AND IN EXECUTION of the power of sale contained in a certain mortgage deed given by Thomas Wentworth, Robert A. Vachon and William G. Long, Trustees, to Frederick H. Jackson, dated July 21, 1914, recorded with Middlesex South District Deeds, Book 3599, page 394, for breach of the condition of said mortgage and for the purpose of foreclosing the same, will be sold at public auction on the premises hereinafter described on Saturday the Fourteenth day of August 1915 at two o'clock in the afternoon, all and singular, the premises conveyed in and by said mortgage deed, viz:

A certain parcel of land with the buildings thereon, situated in that part of Newton, County of Middlesex, Commonwealth of Massachusetts, called Newton Highlands, shown as Lot No. 14 on a Plan of Land in Newton Highlands belonging to Thomas Wentworth, drawn by E. S. Smille, Surveyor, dated April 3, 1905 and recorded with said Deeds, Plan Book 178, Plan 35, and bounded and described as follows, to wit:

Northeasterly by Clark Street seventy-five feet;

Northwesterly by Lot No. 13 on said plan, one hundred and ten feet;

Southwesterly by land formerly of Thomas Wentworth fifty-two feet, and Southeasterly by Lot No. 15 on said plan, one hundred and ten feet.

The premises will be sold subject to a first mortgage for forty-five hundred dollars and accrued interest thereon, held by the Wilder Savings Bank. Also subject to any and all unpaid municipal liens and assessments, if any there be.

Terms: Two hundred dollars at time and place of sale, balance within ten days thereafter at the office of the undersigned, 43 Tremont Street, Boston, Mass.

FREDERICK H. JACKSON, Mortgagee.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts, Middlesex, ss. PROBATE COURT.

To all persons interested in the estate of Ann E. Blodgett late of Newton in said County, deceased:

WHEREAS, Elias B. Jones and Charles B. Wheelock the trustees under the will of said deceased, have presented for allowance, the eighth account of their trust under said will; You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court, to be held at Cambridge in said County, on the fourteenth day of September A. D. 1915, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, why the same should not be allowed.

And said trustees are ordered to serve this citation by delivering a copy thereof to all persons interested in the estate fourteen days at least before said Court, or by publishing the same once in each week, for three successive weeks, in the Newton Graphic a newspaper published in Newton the last publication to be one day at least before said Court, and by mailing, post-paid, a copy of this citation to all known persons interested in the estate seven days at least before said Court.

Witness, Charles J. McIntire, Esquire, First Judge of said Court, this fourth day of August in the year one thousand nine hundred and fifteen.

Notice is hereby given, that the subscriber has been duly appointed administratrix of the estate of Frederick E. Smith late of Newton in the County of Middlesex, deceased, intestate, and has taken upon herself that trust by giving bond, as the law directs. All persons having demands upon the estate of said deceased are required to exhibit the same; and all persons indebted to said estate are called upon to make payment to MARGARET A. SMITH, Adm.

FERGUSON, GRAY

A notable wedding was solemnized in the Church of Our Saviour, Brookline, on Wednesday afternoon, when Miss Edith Gray, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Ellsworth Gray of Brookline, was united in marriage to Luther Mitchell Ferguson, M. D., son of Dr. and Mrs. John C. Ferguson of Arlington street, Newton.

The church was attractively decorated for the occasion with palms and potted plants, and white lilies adorned the altar. The ceremony was performed at 4 o'clock by Rev. Charles W. Duffield, pastor of St. Luke's Church, Allston.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a beautiful wedding gown of white silk crepe from Japan, with duchess and point lace trimmings on the waist, with sleeves and flounces of applique lace, and the train edged with point lace. Her tulle veil was fastened with a wreath of orange blossoms, and lilies of the valley, and she carried a full shower bouquet of orchids and lilies of the valley.

The bride was attended by Miss Florence Ferguson, the bride-groom's sister, as maid of honor, who was gowned in pale green chiffon over pale green satin and wore a white

Mortgagee's Sale of Real Estate

By virtue of the Power of Sale contained in a certain mortgage deed given by Hector L. Campbell and Mina Alice Campbell, wife of said Hector L. Campbell, in her right, of Everett in the County of Middlesex and Commonwealth of Massachusetts to the West Newton Savings Bank, dated August 4th, 1914, and recorded with Middlesex South District Registry of Deeds Book 3905 Page 521, for breach of the condition of said mortgage and for the purpose of foreclosing the same, will be sold at Public Auction on the premises hereinafter described on Monday, the 23rd day of August 1915 at four o'clock in the afternoon, all and singular the premises conveyed by said mortgage and therein described as follows:

A certain parcel of land with the buildings thereon situated in that part of said Newton called AUBURNDALE on Melrose Street, being lot numbered eleven (11) and parts of lots numbered 10 (ten) and 8 (eight) on a Plan of Lots in Auburndale belonging to Charles W. Higgins, by Walter C. Stevens, surveyor, dated July 1891 and filed with Middlesex South District Deeds in Book of Plans 71 plan 33; and bounded and described as follows: Beginning at the northwesterly corner of said lot numbered 11 (eleven) thence running EASTERLY on the northerly line of said lot numbered 11 (eleven) eighty four and 50-100 (84.50) feet, to said Melrose Street; thence running SOUTHERLY on said Melrose Street fifty three and 15-100 53.15 feet to lot numbered 12 (twelve) on said plan; thence running WESTERLY on said lot numbered 12 (twelve) eighty three and 28-100 (83.28) feet to said lot numbered 10 (ten); thence running SOUTHERLY again on said lot numbered 12 (twelve) to land now or late of C. M. Kipp; thence running WESTERLY again on said land of Kipp twenty four (24) feet; thence running NORTHERLY by a line parallel with the easterly line of said lots numbered 8 (eight) and 10 (ten) and distant twenty four (24) feet westerly therefrom forty (40) feet; thence running NORTHEASTERLY to the point of beginning; being the same premises conveyed to said Mina Alice Campbell by Louise H. Campbell by deed dated December 12, 1912 and recorded with said Deeds in book 3747 at page 564.

The said premises will be conveyed subject to taxes, liens, or other incumbrances.

$300 will be required to be paid in cash at the time and place of sale.

lace hat with pink roses and trimmings of pale pink chiffon, and carried a bouquet of Tait roses.

The bridesmaids were Miss Mary Ferguson of Newton, sister of the bride-groom, Miss Ruth Witt of East Boston; Miss Dorothy M. Day of Winthrop and Miss Ethel Osgood of Washington, D. C., cousins of the bride; they were gowned alike in flowered chiffon or delicate colors made over pale green satin; the flowers on chiffon being of pink tied with lovers' knots in tulle, and wore white lace hats trimmed with white chiffon and clusters of pink and blue flowers, long streamers of black ribbon velvet with knots of the same flowers, and carried bouquets of pink sweet peas and forget-me-nots.

Mr. Charles J. Ferguson of Newton, brother of the bride-groom, was best man, and the ushers included Messrs. Frank P. Ferguson of Brooklyn, N. Y., Dr. K. H. Miller of Boston, Dr. L. W. Hill of Jamaica Plain and Lieutenant Edward Roth, Jr., United States Army.

A large reception was held immediately after the ceremony, at the bride's residence on St. Paul street.

Mr. and Mrs. Ferguson received from 4.30 until 6 and were assisted by their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Gray and Dr. and Mrs. Ferguson.

The rooms were very handsomely decorated with palms and potted plants and green views were hung over the doors and windows. In the living-room red gladioli were arranged to harmonize with the gorgeous Chinese hangings used for weddings, and the library was done in pale pink, with pale pink gladioli. In the dining-room the decorations were white with a centre-piece of bride roses arranged effectively on the table.

Mrs. Ferguson is a graduate of Smith College in the class of 1912. Dr. Ferguson was graduated from Phillips Academy at Andover in 1906 and from Harvard in 1910. Later he completed a course at the Harvard Medical School.

Typhoid fever is traced wherever possible, although as a rule nearly every case is contracted outside of the city.

The typhoid prophylactic furnished by the State Department of Health for protection against typhoid fever, is kept at the office and distributed to physicians upon request.

The board also provides laboratory examinations for detecting this disease, and for the examination of sputum for tuberculosis.

Measles are hard to control, the old fashioned notion that they are invariable to childhood is so firmly rooted that infection is often invited by foolish parents.

Notices of all cases of diphtheria, scarlet fever, and measles are sent to the school and library authorities as soon as reported.

One of the important duties of the agent in connection with the care of contagious diseases, especially where the patient is sent to the Hospital is tracing the legal settlement of the patient or patients that the city may recover from the proper authorities, in case the patient is unable to pay for the case. This work is often complicated, and is always difficult.

Medical Inspection

Six physicians and three nurses are employed by the Board for the medical inspection of the school children. Contrary to the commonly accepted ideas, medical inspection of school children has a much wider scope than the mere detection of communicable disease. It includes a general supervision of the physical condition of the children, with the object of detecting and correcting the various defects which prevent the children from obtaining the best results from their schooling. Defects of vision, of hearing, of the teeth and malpositions all are included and when found, it is the duty of the nurses to visit the parents and urge them to have the defect corrected preferably by the family physician, and if this cannot be done by sending the patient to a clinic.

Milk Farms

Under the provisions of Chap. 744 of the Acts of 1914, every dairy sending milk into Newton must be inspected and passed upon by the Board of Health, before a license is issued. This has greatly increased the work of dairy inspection as many of the farms that supply our milk are situated in other states.

Tuberculosis

Under the law every city in Massachusetts must maintain a dispensary for the diagnosis and treatment of persons ill with tuberculosis, and also a hospital for the care of other tubercular persons who need hospital care. The City has a dispensary situated upon the grounds of the Newton Hospital, in a building loaned to it by the Newton Federation of Women's Clubs. Negotiations for a hospital site are in progress and plans have been drawn and it is hoped that the building will soon be started. Meanwhile arrangements are in force with certain private hospitals for the care of patients who need to be sent to hospitals. For others, a nurse is employed who makes periodic visits and sees that the persons on the lists are taking proper precautions.

Sanitary Inspector

The old theory that filth was the direct cause of contagious diseases has been succeeded by the knowledge that dirty conditions will undermine the health and prepare the way for sickness of all kinds. With this object in view, the health department causes regular inspections to be made of the entire city and more frequent inspections of the worst districts. This inspection covers the condition of the plumbing, traps, cellars, outhouses, stables, privies and cesspools and notices for remedy of unsuitable conditions are thereupon issued by the agent. If not corrected, the board issues a nuisance order, under which the person responsible for the premises can be heavily fined, if disobeyed. The board also has power to vacate the premises if it sees fit.

The department also regulates the building of privy vaults and cesspools and licenses a party to remove their contents. This work is of small account at present, the extension of the sewer system greatly reducing their number.

Power is also vested in the board to compel connections with the sewer and much good work has been done in that line. On all such orders hearings are granted by the board and the excuses given by real estate owners for delay are varied and often humorous.

The collection of garbage is also regulated by the board, and with the present conditions, would seem as if a bi-weekly collection in winter, increasing to tri-weekly in summer, with the accumulations removed beyond the city limits within 24 hours from collection, at an annual cost of $11,000 was about as much as the city can afford. The board looks forward to the time when some system of cremation will be adopted for this and other kinds of waste.

All of the above work is in line of prevention and no available statistics are possible as to its value. That it is important, however, no intelligent person can doubt, although it cannot be expressed in dollars and cents.

The abolition of wet and spongy lands is vested in the board of health although work costing $2,000 or over must first be sanctioned by the aldermen. Licensing of stables, both to erect and to occupy, is an annoying duty of the department and many a neighborhood row is aired at stable hearings. The board also licenses the keeping of live fowl, cattle and swine and maintains an oversight on the places in which they are kept.

Burial Permits

No human body can be buried within or removed from the city without a permit from the health office, and the return of physicians as to cause of death and of the undertaker as to other vital statistics are transmitted monthly to the city clerk for record.

One of the most disagreeable duties of the board is to prevent overcrowding. With the foreign influx during the recent street, railroad and sewer improvements in the city, old world ideas of the requisite amount of air space for each person crowded with those of the new. Suspected premises were visited late at night with the assistance of the police, and many a truthful tale could be related by the inspectors, which would rival Munchausen in its seeming improbability. One inspector reported the finding of six men sleeping in a closet, six feet long six feet wide with but one window and a door, both fortunately open. These conditions are not common, however, but it is the duty of the department to prevent them.

Bath-Houses

The board maintains two public bath-houses, one at the Upper Falls on the Charles river and one on Crystal Lake, at Newton Centre. Both of these afford some slight facilities for bathing.

In the main the department works on broad lines, realizing that individual rights must be respected wherever and whenever possible, but that above all, its first duty is to the whole people. The city treats the board fairly in the way of appropriations, about $17,000 being annually expended, outside of the Hospital cases, the cost of which varies greatly from year to year. The work of the board is not limited to appropriations on certain lines, and if a serious epidemic should visit the city, the board's first duty would be to quit its boardroom of expense.

One peculiar feature of sanitary work is that it is never finished. No sooner is one defence completed, than it is found necessary to extend the picket line against the constantly retreating armies of disease and dirt. New conditions arise, new methods are required and invented, and it is hoped that the growth of sanitary knowledge among the people will soon render the work of the health department less strenuous and of greater benefit to the whole community.

TREMONT THEATRE—Only two weeks remain at the Tremont Theatre to see D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" and after that this wonderful narrative will be removed to make way for the run of attractions booked for the Tremont Theatre before the long engagement was begun in this city. "The Birth of a Nation" is the most remarkable attraction of recent years in American stage annals. It uses 18,000 people to tell its story and 3,000 horses add their quota to its bigness. The epic links history and romance in a way never attempted before. Its basic scenes are founded in some of the most stirring events in the nation's development and these are contrasted with human appeals and family interests which are after all the essentials of true drama. Great battles of the Civil War are fought before your eyes. Lee surrenders to Grant at Appomattox. Lincoln is assassinated. Actually as the scene took place fifty years ago in Ford's Theatre, Washington. The South both before and after the war is pictured in its most interesting phases. Wild rides of the Klansmen lend a dash and spirit to the performances. All remains exactly as it was given originally in Boston when this marvelous picture astounded the city and created more comment than all the plays that have been seen here in a decade. As but a few more performances remain before the end of the run those who have delayed viewing the great production will keep the Tremont Theatre crowded from now until the end of the engagement.

THE MOUNTAIN NATIONAL PARK
This is the first season under national control of the stupendous, snow-capped mountain ridge of Colorado, the "Top of the World," the great backbone of the continent, now and hereafter to be designated the Rocky Mountain National Park. There are many mountains in the Colorado Rockies that exceed 14,000 feet in height, but only one of them is included in the park. Not for record-breaking altitudes, but for its supreme scenic magnificence and availability for public use and resort, was that portion of the great range, of which Longs Peak is the center, set aside for special development and administration.

This was done by Congress at its last session. On July 1 Secretary Lane took formal possession by the appointment of Charles R. Trowbridge as temporary supervisor, with permanent headquarters at Estes Park, the natural gateway to this region of enchantment. The work of building a road by the Fall River Canyon from Estes Park across the range to Grand Lake on the west is now actively under way. This road is the State's contribution to the park.

The Rocky Mountain National Park lies about 70 miles northwest of Denver. It contains about 350 square miles, not a foot of which is less than 8,000 feet above sea level. It lies on either side of the Continental Divide, which at this point runs irregularly north and south.

Bristles with Lofly Peaks
This is a wonderful snow-capped range carrying glaciers in its hollows. It includes, from Specimen Mountain on the north, the finest breeding ground in the world for the celebrated Rocky Mountain sheep, Mounts Ida and Julien, Terra Tomah Peak, Nakai Peak, Snowdrift Peak, Flattop Mountain, Hallet Peak, Otis Peak, Taylor Peak, McHenry's Peak, Storm Peak, Mount Lady Washington, Longs Peak (14,255 feet), Mount Meeker, Pagoda, Chief's Head, Mount Alice, Tanima Peak, Mahana Peak, Ouzel Peak, and Mount Copeland, to say nothing of many noble mountains rising well apart from the Divide.

"Simply bristles with mountain peaks," said Enos Mills to the House Committee on the Public Lands last December, "there are more than sixty that rise above 12,000 feet and a number between 13,000 and 14,000 feet, and one that rises above 14,000 feet. Between these peaks are a number of mountain lakes, nearly 200 of them. These vary in size from a few acres up to fifty or sixty acres. They are all beautiful. Then, along with this, remembering that this is the Continental Divide, it is not a high barren region. For instance, the timber line feet, but on these mountains it is about 11,500 feet and over to timber line. There are more than forty species of plants growing. In this region there are not only mountain peaks and mountain lakes but there are many kinds of wild life. For instance, you have in this region a great number of mountain sheep, an animal as active and as alert and agile as the chamois in the Alps. It ranges in the higher parts of this section, sometimes running down to the lower regions.

Grizzlies and Others
"In addition to the mountain sheep other big game are the grizzly bear and the black bear; deer are quite common, and that interesting animal, the beaver, is exceedingly common. In addition to this, I hope you will remember that there are blooming in this section each year not less than 1,000 varieties of wild flowers. You can not find in all the Alps in an equal area as many kinds of wild plants. In reference to this area being scenic, gentlemen, I want to call your attention to the fact that there is no place in the world, off the railroad, that has, during the past few years, been visited by as many people as this region proposed for the Rocky Mountain National Park. Nature has made it a splendid natural park."

Mr. R. B. Marshall, chief geographer, who was commissioned by the Government to report on this region, began in these words:
"The region as a whole is as beautiful as any to be found in the United States, or indeed, in the world. There is spread before the eye a gorgeous assemblage of wonderful mountain sculpture surrounded by fantastic and ever changing clouds suspended in an apparently atomless space. At first view, as one beholds the scene in awe and amazement, the effect is as of an enormous painting, a vast panorama stretching away to illimitable distances; gradually this idea of distance disappears, the magnificent work of nature seems to draw nearer and nearer, reduced apparently by an unseen microscope to the refinement of a delicate cameo. Each view becomes a more fascinating, the whole presenting an impressive picture never to be forgotten."

Most Frequent of All
This National Park is no undiscovered paradise of supreme beauty, like the Sequoia National Park in California, which, in the twenty-fourth year of its existence, had, last season, only 4,667 visitors. More than 50,000 persons visited the region now covered by the Rocky Mountain National Park last year, and a considerable proportion of these stayed there for a month or more. Most of them patronized hotels at Estes Park at the base of Longs Peak. Estes Park has not been included in the National Park only because of its high state of development, because of its considerable areas of "patented" or privately owned land. In effect, Estes Park is a part of the National Park, nevertheless. In fact, the National Park boundary has been indented at that point expressly to leave these private holdings outside the national jurisdiction.

One reason why this region is so much visited is that it is readily reached from large centers of eastern and central population. It is only 30 hours from Chicago.

GIRLS PLAY BASE BALL

The Newton Lower Falls girls' baseball team, which has been under the supervision of Louise Edsall of Salem, Normal '15, defeated the Upper Falls girls on the Lower Falls playground Tuesday afternoon, 6 to 4. The victors are now tied with the losers for the championship of the South Playground League. The rubber for the championship will probably be played Aug. 20 or 21.

Upper Falls pitcher Nina Porter was in great form and might have won had her support been up to the usual standard. Catherine McLaughlin, the Lower Falls pitcher, had something on the ball as her opponents could not hit her offerings after the first inning.

In the last of the fifth, which is the regulation number of innings for these games, the Lower Falls found it rather hard to retire the Upper Falls nine.

SENATOR WEEKS

His Fitness for President Upheld by Springfield Union

Collier's Weekly is devoting a great deal of attention to Senator Weeks as a possible candidate for the Republican nomination in 1916, and, as this attention is not intended to be helpful, we are persuaded that the editor of Collier's regards Mr. Weeks as a formidable factor in the situation. Collier's admits, somewhat reluctantly, that the record of the Massachusetts man "as a congressman and senator has not been unworthy," but it is greatly disturbed, or professes to be, because of his calling "Senator Weeks is a stockbroker." It says, from which it reasons he would never do as a candidate. But this, it appears, is not the senator's only sin; he is not the biggest stockbroker in the United States. We do not quite follow the mental process employed by Collier's in reaching its conclusions, but we gather that to be a stockbroker is nothing short of a crime, unless one happens to be a monstrously big stockbroker, in which event one is entitled to have distinction and may even aspire to very high public office.

Whether Senator Weeks is actively seeking the Republican nomination we do not know, but it is quite true that his name is being pretty freely discussed in that connection in various parts of the country. The "not unworthy" record he has made in Congress has appealed to many Republicans as being decidedly worthy. It has been marked by breadth of view, entire disinterestedness and abundant courage. It has sometimes pleased the progressives and dumfounded the conservatives, while at other times the reverse has been true. All of which goes to show that Mr. Weeks does his own thinking and arrives at his conclusions according to his understanding of the facts. His position is either progressive or conservative according to the dictates of his intelligence and a patriotic desire to serve the best interests of the country.

The fact that he is a member of an important brokerage firm may have given him a particularly keen insight into the needs of the nation's banking and currency system; at any rate his information on that subject was eagerly sought and his views were accepted as correct. The country feels very much indebted to this "stockbroker" for the sound judgment he displayed in connection with the recently enacted currency bill. But strangely enough Senator Weeks has not confined his legislative activities to those matters which are supposed to concern primarily our business interests. The conservation of our forest lands and natural scenery, the protection of migratory birds, the improvement of our postal facilities and the strengthening of our means of defence have all been matters that have enlisted the active interest of the senator and have associated his name with various pieces of legislation along these lines.

If there is anything about the brokerage business, about the buying and selling of securities, about the intricate banking that unites a man to hold high public office it has not been disclosed in the record that Senator Weeks has made. It is this record that has caused him to be regarded as a man entirely worthy to receive the Republican nomination for President, whether he is a candidate for the nomination or not. A worse thing might happen to the country than to have a big brainy business man in the White House.—Springfield Union, Rep.

LETTER FROM ABROAD

Interesting Description of War Conditions in England

The following letter has just been received by Mr. W. J. Cozens from his brother in England and gives an interesting statement of war conditions in that country.

The Copse, Cranleigh, Surrey
July 22, 1915

My dear Will:—
Your very welcome letter arrived on Tuesday, having taken just a fortnight to reach me. The papers came soon after and are much appreciated. I sent you a British Weekly at once and will follow it up with others when anything interesting happens.

We are, as you Americans think, very slow in getting a move on, chiefly because our people have had no experience of what war means, excepting colonial wars at a great distance, and we never reckoned to get up a big army to match those on the continent. Our part was always to be the sea affair with a small expeditionary army of 150,000 to help France during the time she was mobilizing.

It is only now that we realize that, if Germany is to be beaten, we must send over a couple of millions of men at least. We have already sent three quarters of a million to France and are exposed to artillery fire from the Dardanelles, Egypt, whilst another 100,000 are fighting in Africa and Arabia.

At least 1,000,000 are being kept at home, as the authorities certainly expect the Germans to make a desperate effort at a combined sea and land attack perhaps early in the autumn when they think our ships may be weakened and less seaworthy from the long exposure whilst theirs have been safely in dock.

Our opinion seems to be that the Rhine frontier of Germany is too strongly fortified to break through without a wicked loss of life so that the plan is to hold their army of at least 2,500,000 men on that front till they collapse either through financial stoppage or an attack from the south and then to move westwards. The navy wanted to try their hand at first thinking they could break through, but they failed and so gave the Germans plenty of time to get ready whilst our land forces were being prepared. Now the task is a terrible one, for the peninsula is so open that there is no cover for our men and they are exposed to artillery fire from the Turkish batteries from the moment they land and life is a torment from flies and mosquitoes etc. Still we are making progress and have got our teeth in and Constantinople has got to fall before we are through!

With regard to numbers of soldiers, our people keep very quiet, but the country is full of men in khaki, and as soon as guns and munitions are ready there will be a surprise. We ought to have been ready in June but owing to Kitchener having undertaken more than any one man could do, the munitions side of the matter got into a mess and Lloyd George has got to hurry things up and we may be ready in September.

There is no Socialist or Peace party, in England to cause trouble. I have never known the country to be so united and determined as it is today. Germany has shown herself to be a mighty empire which has abandoned the very appearance of Christianity and boldly puts might for right and Germany above all! She has kept France and Russia and the smaller

Fifth of a Series of Articles Explaining the Management of the City

The recent announcement of a tax rate of $18.50 naturally draws attention to the work and methods employed by the board of assessors of the City of Newton.

Notwithstanding its importance as the revenue producing department of the city, few of our citizens probably realize how its work affects them until the annual tax bills have been issued and the direct call made upon the pocketbook of every tax payer in the city.

The department is under the charge of three principal assessors, two of whom give but two thirds of their time to the work of the city. There are also 15 assistant assessors, appointed annually by the mayor and who are paid on a per diem basis for work performed. The office work is in the hands of competent clerks, and there are from six to ten temporary clerks employed each summer.

The real business of the year begins on April 1st, but much preliminary work must be done in the earlier months in preparation. On April 1st, the assistant assessors begin a systematic canvass of the district which they are assigned and visiting each house, make careful notes of the following facts—the name, age, occupation and residence of every male over 20 years of age and his residence on April 1st of the previous year. The number of horses, cows, dogs, and the actual value of such other personal property as carriages, automobiles, household property above $2000 valuation as well as the value of any stock in trade carried by local merchants.

These facts are entered in what is called a street book, and on the completion of the canvass, usually within two or four weeks, the book is taken to City Hall. Here the assistant assessors with one of the temporary clerks compares the new information with that obtained the previous year and the facts regarding each male is transferred to a card, that used in other years being brought up to date or corrected, as the facts require.

These cards arranged by streets and numbers under each precinct are the basis from which the annual list of assessed polls is printed for the benefit of the registrars of voters.

In the meantime the principal assessors are engaged in determining the value of each piece of real estate and in efforts to obtain a clear idea of the intangible personal property, such as stocks and bonds, owned by residents of this city.

The principal assessors do not visit each piece of real estate each year, the valuations, except where important changes in development or large improvements in buildings have been made, being determined from the records at the office. Visits are usually made by the entire board to property where it is evident some change in valuation is necessary or desirable, and the board also works on a plan of revaluation of each ward of the city in every year. This method allows a revaluation of the entire city every seven years and seems as fair a method of doing the work as is possible.

The entire city is planned and plotted on what is known as the "block" system. Every part of the city has been surveyed by the city engineers department and plotted on plans of the assessors office. The cost of this work which was begun some twenty years ago has amounted to thousands of dollars, but has fully paid for itself, when compared with the amount of property which escaped taxation thru the loose methods and "guesses" of a generation ago. These plans are kept up to date as property is sold or developed so that the Assessors always have on hand the latest changes of all real estate in the city.

The hardest task of all, however, is fixing the valuation of the personal property of the residents of the city. The law requires every citizen to file a sworn statement with the assessors on or before May 15 of each year, but it is more honored in the breach than in the observance, even tho the assessors have the right to "doom" all delinquents. The doomsday law is stringent enough to suit the most exacting, and while a person who objects to the amount of personal property for which he is doomed, has the right to appear before the Assessors and make oath as to the correct amount, the conditions are so onerous that it is rarely done.

After the valuations of both real and personal estate have been determined, the assessors are then ready to declare the rate of taxation for the current year.

They receive annually from the city clerk, a statement of the amount of appropriations made by the board of aldermen, a warrant from the county commissioners of the amount required for county expenses, notice from the state treasurer of the state tax apportioned to this city and the amounts due and payable for our

REPORT OF AUDITING COMMITTEE

July 22, 1915

To the President and Directors of The Newton Trust Co., Gentlemen:

The Committee of the Stockholders, appointed under the provisions of the statute, to make an examination of the business of the Bank, as required by our By-laws, have the honor to submit herewith the report of Messrs. Ewer & Neal, whom we have employed to perform the technical part of the examination and whose figures we adopt as our own.

In addition to the examination made by the experts, upon whom we rely for the presentation of facts, the Committee has personally gone over in a very thorough manner the entire report and investigated the several transactions, compared a large number of the statements and reports upon the various loans and is glad to report its cordial appreciation of the good condition of the bank's business and the fine showing which it makes.

We find its business in good condition, its loans in very good condition, and its affairs prosperous.

The report, in duplicate, has been handed to the Treasurer.

Very respectfully,

HENRY H. KENDALL

EDITORIAL

Residents of this city do not need any evidence as to the fitness of Senator John W. Weeks to be the president of these United States, but it is pleasing to read the recent editorial from the Springfield Union, in reply to criticisms, to speak mildly, of the editor of Collier's. It is fairly easy to find fault, when facts are both misstated as well as garbled, as Collier's prints them. Mr. Weeks has not only had an honorable career in business, previous to his election ten years ago to Congress, but his work at Washington has prevented his active participation in the affairs of his firm in Boston. Collier's, also, fails to note the unusual fact, that upon Mr. Weeks election to the Senate, two years ago, he absolutely divorced his business interests, resigning from his partnership in the firm of Hornblower and Weeks, and from all positions as director or trustee which he then held. There are probably few men in the United States whose names are as free from business entanglements, (as they are generally understood) as Mr. Weeks.

The Republicans of this city have an unusual opportunity this year to look over the various candidates for state and county offices, at the outing which has been arranged at the Riverside Recreation Grounds for Saturday, August 28th. Both candidates for governor, Mr. McCall and Mr. Cushing, both candidates for lieutenant goverand many others will be present to meet the voters of Newton, Waltham and vicinity. It will undoubtedly prove to be a most interesting occasion.

The late Michael Enegeess was a fine type of a large class of our citizenship, who, in a quiet, unostentatious way, furnish the bone and sinew of the nation. Coming to this country in his early youth, he has lived among us for forty years, bringing up a large family in a most creditable manner, and has earned and won the respect of his friends and neighbors.

BOY DROWNED

James Knowles, 12 years, who lives at 216 Grove street, Auburndale, was drowned in Roberts Pond, South street, yesterday morning shortly after 11 o'clock. The Knowles boy was playing with his brother, George Knowles, 16 years, in the rear of Roberts paper mill, when James lost his balance and fell into the water. George gave the alarm and several men from the mill rushed over to assist him, but the body never rose to the surface.

The Waltham Police Department was notified and Inspector William P. Mc-Murray accompanied by patrolman
Charles E. Cater and Dr. A. L. Stone of the local Board of Health went to the scene and started to search for the body. They were also assisted by Sergeant Chalmers of the Metropolitan Park Police. After some difficulty the body was located and brought to the surface by Dr. Stone.

Dr. Stone tried artificial respiration and used the pulmotor, but to no avail.

Shall the Proposed Amendment to the Constitution Enabling Women to Vote be Approved and Ratified

YES

In the past five weeks twelve ganges have gone on record as favoring woman suffrage.

Hon. Roger Sherman Hoar, former State Senator, who has been touring the western part of the State for suffrage, says, "I am firmly convinced that the five western counties will return a splendid majority for equal suffrage on election day."

Indication of the way in which the Anti-Suffragists are assisting the cause of Massachusetts women was shown at a meeting in Winchester.
Charles L. Underhill of Somerville was the speaker. At the end of his remarks, questions were invited from the audience. Whitfield Tuck, a prominent democrat of Winchester, and a suffragist from the time he cast his first vote, asked Mr. Underhill how it was that every candidate for governor who has announced his candidacy up to the present time on every ticket, had declared in favor of Votes for Women?

The audience expected an argument from Mr. Underhill on this question.
Instead of an argument they received this answer: "The men whom you mention," said Mr. Underhill, "are all politicians. They have their ears to the ground. They feel that Woman Suffrage is popular, and therefore they declare in its favor." After enjoying a good laugh, Mr. Tuck then seriously asked Mr. Underhill if he meant to include Samuel W. McCall of Winchester —where the meeting was being held—in the class of "politicians."

Mr. Underhill answered at some length but not to the point. When the Anti-Suffrage orators are put to the expedient of explaining away the attitude of the leading men in all parties on Woman Suffrage by saying that these men look upon Woman Suffrage as being popular, it is about time that everybody recognized the overwhelming popularity of the movement.

JESS WILLARD A SUFFRAGIST Says His Wife Votes in California, and Women Are As Bright As Men

Jess Willard, the world's heavyweight champion, was interviewed as to his views on equal suffrage when in Uniontown, Pa., the other day.
"Certainly, I believe in woman suffrage," he said, as reported in the Philadelphia North American.

"I believe that woman is man's equal in mentality, at least," he continued.
"If a man is bright enough to know how to cast a ballot, why isn't a woman?"

"In California, where I live when at home, we have woman suffrage. My wife is registered among the State's voters. And there the women's vote has accomplished much that was left undone when the men made the laws."

"The question of woman's vote is not, in my opinion, a serious problem.
I think the application of a little bit of everyday horse sense would leave no difficulty in the way of granting women the franchise."

The North American says:
"Big Jess Willard, who won the championship of the world by defeating Jack Johnson, talked slowly, plainly and seriously. It was apparent that he had given the matter thought, for his words carried conviction, leaving no opportunity to doubt his sincerity.
Every inch of his six-foot-six is with the cause of woman suffrage."

MR. COBB'S BIRTHDAY

Mr. Darius Cobb celebrated his 81st birthday last Friday at his home, 1187
Boylston street Newton Highlands.
Where scores of friends called with congratulations and gifts.

In the evening the annual family reunion, which for 14 years has been held on the lawn, was given indoors because of the weather. Among those present was Dr. J. H. Crocker of Christ Church, Dorchester, a third cousin of the artist.

Mr. Cobb was immensely pleased over news from his youngest son, Percival B. Cobb of Wantagh, L. I., announcing the birth, Wednesday, of the artist's first grandson bearing the name of Cobb. The baby was named Alfred, after Alfred the Great.

Mr. Cobb still believes that he will live to be 100 years old, and he has planned work enough to keep him busy until that time. At present he is busily engaged on improving "A Praying Christ," a companion piece to
"The Prince of Peace." He is also painting of portrait of himself for his nephew, Francis F. Cobb of Wellesley Hills, and landscapes of his trip through the West.

CITY HALL NOTES

Mr. Howard P. Converse of Auburndale has resigned as a member of the Newton Planning Commission, on account of business engagements which take him outside the state.
The Registrars of Voters held their last session tomorrow evening to certify to nomination papers for the state primary.

There is an erroneous impression among many people that Feminism is a late off-shoot of suffrage, accepted only by the most radical suffragists. This is far from the truth. From the very beginnings of the suffrage movement, leaders of the movement have preached the feminist doctrine of free love. Mary Wollstonecraft, the first woman to preach woman suffrage in England, was a feminist who entered into two free unions herself—the first with Captain Unley, the second with William Godwin.

She considered economic independence necessary for the emancipation of her sex, and made the obtaining of the franchise only a small part of her programme, just as do the feminists of today. She agreed with the materialistic philosophers of the time of the French Revolution that "marriage is the worst of all laws" and that it tyrannously cramped woman's personality.

The first woman to lecture on Woman's Rights in this country was Frances Wright, a direct disciple of Mary Wollstonecraft. Her portrait forms the frontispiece of the "History of Woman Suffrage," and her career shows the natural and long-established connection between suffragism and socialism. She was a member of Robert Owen's communistic colony in New Harmony, Indiana, and collaborated in his propaganda. She too regarded marriage as a tyrannous institution that murdered love. Her atheistic and revolutionary views aroused indignant public protests even among very liberal thinkers.

To show that the cult of the feminists is not new in America, but was built into the initial rebellion begun in 1818 to "emancipate" women and give them the vote, the following extracts are selected from Volume I, History of Woman Suffrage, edited by Susan B.
Anthony and Elizabeth Cady Stanton, pioneer suffrage leaders. (Miss Anthony preceded Dr. Shaw as president of the National Woman Suffrage Association):

"The influence of the Catholic Church has had in religious free thought, that monarchies have had on political free thought, that serfdom has had on free labor, have all been cumulative in the FAMILY upon woman."

"Writers on this question differ as to the universal degradation of women of all periods and nations."

"The condition of married women, under the laws of all countries, has been essentially that of slaves."

"The isolated household is responsible for a large share of woman's ignorance and degradation."

"The woman is uniformly sacrificed to the wife and mother."

"The love of offspring, common to ALL orders of women and all forms of animal life . . . cannot as a sentimental rank with conjugal love . . .

Neither does ordinary motherhood . . .
in its entirety, with the lofty ambition and conscientious devotion of the artist whose pure children of the brain . . . are ever beckoning her upward to an ideal world of beauty."

The Feminists of today merely repeat and amplify the early suffrage teachings. Mild samples of the modern doctrine are given below; their more radical utterances are unfit for quotation.

A pamphlet called "The Bondwoman," issued by the National Suffrage Association, says: "The Freewoman must be in a position to bear children if she wants them without soliciting maintenance from any man whoever he may be."

Mrs. Charlotte Perkins Gilman, one of the most popular and most quoted speakers and writers for suffrage, says:
"The home of today is a permanent check on the growth of humanity."

"Even a cat can be a mother."
"The home is no more holy than the Post office."

The Rev. Anna Shaw says that the present war is helping woman suffrage especially in Europe because women have come out from the homes as never before, and they will not go back.
Max Eastman, an extreme feminist now advocating the teaching of "Revolutionary Birth Control"—which is the new name for legalized instructions in race suicide—said a year ago of the woman editor of the "Woman Rebel," who magazine was suppressed by the postal authorities for obscenity:

"In Margaret Sanger's new magazine,
the Woman Rebel, with its motto 'No Gods, No Masters, I look for a strong and affirmative stand on the final goal of feminism.' Max Eastman was the first man to organize a Men's League for Woman Suffrage in this country.
For over a year his pamphlets ridiculing the 'home and mother sentiment' headed the list of 'what to read on woman suffrage' that the National American Woman Suffrage Association advertised in Socialist magazines. He teaches that 'Woman should be free from all the limitations of law, of dog-

Hear Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, President of the National American Woman Suffrage Association, in an authorized special interview in a suffrage paper:
"I have this much to say, and that is that the marriage ceremony should be cut out. It is useless and has served its day. Why women think that they should give up their life work simply because they have been married is a puzzle to me. If I were a czar I would unmarry half the people I know."

Mrs. Philip Snowden, a well known socialist of England, is expected to speak in the Massachusetts campaign sometime before November. Mrs.
Snowden will probably repress her socialistic sentiments here, but this is what she says in her book, "The Woman Socialist."

"Free as the wind, the socialist wife will be bound only by her natural love for husband and children—divorce will be much more easy of accomplishment, and it is more than probable that the church marriage service will be abolished."

Not only does socialism help suffrage, but suffrage helps socialism. The New York Call (Socialist) of June 24, says of the socialist-suffrage campaign in New York: "By this campaign more women have been won for socialism."

Mortgagee's Sale of Real Estate

By virtue of and pursuant to the power of sale contained in a certain mortgage given by Levi L. Tower of Newton in the County of Middlesex and Commonwealth of Massachusetts to J. Franklin Faxon of Quincy in the County of Norfolk and said Commonwealth, dated February 4, 1907, and recorded with Middlesex South District Deeds Book 3280 Page 395, and for breach of the condition of said mortgage and for the purpose of foreclosing the same, will be sold at public auction on the premises hereinafter described, which are the same premises described in said mortgage, upon Wednesday the 25th day of August 1915 at eleven o'clock A. M.

A certain parcel of land situated in that part of said Newton called Newton Centre and bounded and described as follows:

Beginning at a point on the Western line of Parker Street at its intersection with Stearns and thence running Southerly on said Parker Street four hundred and twenty feet more or less to land now or formerly of one Cunningham; thence turning and running Westerly on said land of Cunningham two hundred and forty feet more or less to a corner; thence turning and running Southerly on said land of Cunningham and land of owners unknown about three hundred and thirty-eight feet to a corner; thence turning and running a little North of West on land of owners unknown about two hundred ninety-two feet to a corner; thence turning and running a little West of South by land of owners unknown about five hundred and forty-eight feet to a corner; thence turning and running Southwesterly by land of owners unknown about three hundred and sixty feet to a corner; thence turning and running Northwesterly by land of owners unknown as the wall now stands about two hundred and ten feet to a corner in the wall; thence turning and running Northeasterly as the wall stands about one hundred and five feet to a corner; thence turning and running Northwesterly by land of owners unknown two hundred and ten feet to a corner; thence turning and running Westerly on land of owners unknown about four hundred and thirty-two feet to land of one Stone; thence turning and running Northerly by said land of one Stone about nine hundred and twenty feet to a corner; thence turning and running Northwesterly on land of said Stone three hundred and seventy-five feet to a corner; thence turning and running Northerly again by land of owners unknown three hundred and thirty feet to the Southern line of Boylston Street; thence turning and running Easterly by said Boylston Street about eighteen hundred and seventy-five feet to land now or late of Harriet A. Clark; thence turning and running Southerly by said land of Harriet A. Clark about one hundred and one and 40-100 feet to a corner; thence turning and running Easterly by said land of Harriet A. Clark one hundred feet to a corner; thence turning and running a little West of South by said land of Harriet A. Clark one hundred and thirty-five feet to the Northern line of Oakdale Road; thence running across said Oakdale Road, forty feet to a corner of the land of Adey; thence running Southerly by said land of Adey one hundred and twenty-five feet to a corner; thence running Westerly by land of owners unknown and by land of Stearns one hundred and eighty one and 50-100 feet to a corner of said land of Stearns; thence running Southerly by said land of Stearns across Parker Avenue and by other land of said Stearns two hundred and sixty-five feet to the most Southwesterly corner of said land of Stearns; thence running Easterly by said land of Stearns about eighty-eight feet to a corner; thence running Northerly by said land of Stearns about twenty-five feet to land of Charles C. Stearns; thence running Easterly by land of Stearns and of Stearns and Eagles two hundred and twenty-five feet to the Western line of said Parker Street and the point of beginning. Containing from 57 to 60 acres, more or less. The above-described premises are partly shown on a plan of building lots Walnut Hill Newton, Mass., dated July 1906 to be recorded with Middlesex (South District) deeds. Excepting however from the above-described premises a certain parcel of land situated on the Southerly side of said Boylston Street being lots numbered Eight to Fifteen inclusive on a plan made by E. S. Smilie Surveyor dated September 1, 1906, for a full description of said parcel see deed given by Clinton E. Achorn et al to Alfred A. Sherman dated September 12, 1906 recorded with said deeds book 3254 page 475. Excepting also from the above premises lots numbered Five, Six and Twenty-one on the plan first above-mentioned. Being the same premises conveyed to said Tower by Clinton A. Achorn and A. Alexander Achorn, his wife in her right; all said premises, being conveyed together with and subject to the rights of way set forth or mentioned in said deed to Tower and subject also to any rights of way over the streets shown on said first mentioned plan.

The premises are sold subject to any unpaid taxes or assessments. One Thousand Dollars to be paid at the time of sale; other terms to be announced at the time of the sale.

The Exploits of Elaine

A Detective Novel and a Motion Picture Drama

SYNOPSIS.

The New York police are mystified by a series of murders of prominent men. The principal clue to the murderer is the warning letter which is sent the victims, signed with a "clutching hand." The latest victim of the mysterious assassin is Taylor Dodge, the insurance president. His daughter, Elaine, employs Craig Kennedy, the famous scientific detective, to try to unravel the mystery. What Kennedy accomplishes is told by his friend Jameson, a newspaper man. Clutching Hand tries to kill Elaine by means of a diabolical device which generates a poison in the wall paper of her room that is deadly to breathe for any length of time. Again Kennedy's scientific knowledge is brought into play just in season to save the heroine from death.

SIXTH EPISODE

"The Vampire."

Kennedy went the next day to the Dodge house, and, as usual, Perry Bennett, Elaine's lawyer, was there in the library with Elaine, still going over the Clutching Hand case in their endeavor to track down the mysterious master criminal.

Bennett seemed as deeply as ever in love with Elaine. Still, as Jennings admitted Craig, it was sufficiently evident by the manner in which Elaine left Bennett and ran to greet Craig that she had the highest regard for him.

"I've brought you a little document that may interest you," remarked Kennedy, reaching into his pocket and pulling out an envelope.

Elaine tore it open and looked at the paper within.

"Oh, how thoughtful of you!" she exclaimed in surprise.

It was a permit from the police made out in her name allowing her to carry a revolver.

A moment later, Kennedy reached into his coat pocket and produced a little automatic which he handed to her.

"Thank you," she cried, eagerly. Elaine examined the gun with interest, then, raising it, pointed it playfully at Bennett.

"Oh, no, no!" exclaimed Kennedy, taking her arm quickly and gently, deflecting the weapon away. "You mustn't think it is a toy. It explodes at a mere touch of the trigger—when that safety ratchet is turned."

Bennett had realized the danger and had jumped back, almost mechanically. As he did so, he bumped into a suit of medieval armor standing by the wall, knocking it over with a resounding crash.

"I beg pardon," he ejaculated, "I'm very sorry. That was very awkward of me."

Jennings, who had been busy about the portieres at the doorway, started to pick up the fallen knight.

"Too bad, too bad," apologized Bennett profusely. "I really forgot how close I was to the thing."

"Oh, never mind," returned Elaine, a little crestfallen. "It is smashed all right—but it was my fault. Jennings, send for someone to repair it."

It was late that night that a masked figure succeeded in raising itself to the narrow ornamental ledge under Elaine's bedroom window.

Elaine was a light sleeper, and, besides, Rusty, her faithful collie, now fully recovered from the poison, was in her room.

Rusty growled and the sudden noise awakened her.

Startled, Elaine instantly thought of the automatic. She reached under her pillow, keeping very quiet, and drew forth the gun that Craig had given her. Stealthily concealing her actions under the covers, she leveled the automatic at the figure silhouetted in her window and fired three times.

The figure fell back.

Down in the street below, the assistant of the Clutching Hand who had waited while Taylor Dodge was electrocuted, was waiting as his confederate, "Pitts Slim"—which indicated that he was both wiry in stature and libelous in delegating his nativity—made the attempt.

As Slim came tumbling down, having fallen back from the window above mortally wounded, the confederate lifted him up and carried him out of sight hurriedly.

Elaine, by this time, had turned on the lights and had run to the window to look out. Rusty was barking loudly.

In a side street near by stood a waiting automobile, at the wheel of which sat another of the emissaries of the Clutching Hand. The driver looked up, startled, as he saw his fellow hurry around the corner carrying the wounded "Pitts Slim." It was the work of just a moment to drop the wounded man, as comfortably as possible under the circumstances, in the rear seat, while his pals started the car off with a jerk in the hurry of escape.

Jennings, having hastily slipped his trousers on over his pajamas, came running down the hall, while Marie, frightened, came in the other direction. Aunt Josephine appeared a few seconds later, adding to the general excitement.

"What's the matter?" she asked, anxiously.

"A burglar, I think," exclaimed Elaine, still holding the gun in her hand. "Someone tried to get into my window."

"My gracious!" cried Aunt Josephine, in alarm. "Where will this thing end?"

"Well," Elaine laughed, a little nervously, now that it was all over, "I want you all to go to bed and stop worrying about me. Don't you see I'm perfectly able to take care of myself? Besides, there isn't a chance now of the burglar coming back. Why, I shot him."

"Yes," put in Aunt Josephine, "but—"

Elaine laughingly interrupted her and playfully made as though she were driving them out of her room.

"Rusty!" she called. "Down, there!"

The intelligent collie seemed to understand. He lay down by the doorway, his nose close to the bottom of the door, and his ears alert.

Finally Elaine, too, retired again.

Meanwhile the wounded man was being hurried to one of the landings of the mysterious Clutching Hand.

"Pitts Slim" drew up, and the other two men leaped out of it. With a hurried glance about they unlocked the front door with a pass key and entered, carrying the man.

Indoors was another emissary of the Clutching Hand, a rather studious-looking chap.

"Why, what's the matter?" he exclaimed as the crooks entered his room supporting their half-fainting, wounded pal.

"Slim got a couple of pills," they panted as they laid him on a couch.

"How?" demanded the other.

"Trying to get into the Dodge house," Elaine did it."

Slim was, quite evidently, badly wounded and was bleeding profusely. A glance at him was enough for the studious-looking chap. He went to a secret panel and, pressing it down, took out what was apparently a secret house telephone.

In another part of this mysterious house was the secret room of the Clutching Hand himself, where he hid his identity from even his most trusted followers.

His telephone rang and he took down the receiver.

"Pitts Slim's been wounded, badly, chief," was all he waited to hear.

With scarcely a word he hung up the receiver, then opened a table drawer and took out a full face mask. Next he went to a nearby bookcase, premeditated another secret spring, and a panel opened. He passed through, the mask adjusted.

Across, in the larger outside study, another panel opened, and the Clutching Hand, all crouched up, transformed, appeared. Without a word he advanced to the couch on which the wounded crook lay, and examined him.

"How did it happen?" he asked at length.

"Miss Dodge shot him," answered the others, "with an automatic."

"That Craig Kennedy must have given it to her!" he exclaimed with suppressed fury.

For a moment the Clutching Hand stopped to consider. Then he seized the regular telephone.

"Doctor Martin?" he asked, as he got the number he called.

Late as it was, the doctor, who was a well-known surgeon in that part of the country, answered from an extension of his telephone near his bed.

The call was urgent, and apparently from a family which he did not feel that he could neglect.

Doctor Martin was a middle-aged man, one of those medical men on whose judgment one instinctively relies.

It was only a matter of minutes before the doctor was speeding over the now deserted suburban roads, apparently on an errand of mercy.

At the address that had been given him he drew up to the side of the road, got out and ran up the steps to the door. A ring at the bell brought a sleepy man to the door, in his trousers and nightshirt.

"How's the patient?" asked Doctor Martin, eagerly.

"Patient!" repeated the man, rubbing his eyes. "There's no one sick here."

Slowly it dawned on the doctor that it was a false alarm, and that he must be the victim of some practical joke.

"Well, that's a great note," he growled, as the man shut the door.

He descended the steps, muttering harsh language at some unknown trickster. As he climbed back into his machine and made ready to start two men seemed to rise before him as if from nowhere.

As a matter of fact they had been sent there by the Clutching Hand, and were hiding in a nearby cellarway until their chance came.

One man stood on the running board, on either side of him, and two gins yawned menacingly at him.

"Drive ahead that way!" muttered one man, seating himself in the runabout with his gun close to the doctor's ribs.

The other kept his place on the running board, and on they drove in the direction of the mysterious, dark house. Half a mile, perhaps, down the road, they halted and left the car beside the walk.

Doctor Martin was too surprised to marvel at anything now, and he realized that he was in the power of two desperate men. Quickly they blindfolded him.

It seemed an interminable walk, as they led him about to confuse him, but at last he could feel that they had taken him into a house and along passages, which they were making unnecessarily long in order to destroy all recollection that they could.

Finally he knew that he was in a room in which others were present.

A moment later he felt them remove the bandage from his eyes, and, blinking at the light, he could see a hard-faced fellow, pale and weak, on a blood-stained couch. Over him bent a masked man and another man stood tear by endeavoring by improvised bandages to stop the flow of blood.

"What can you do for this fellow?" asked the masked man.

Doctor Martin, seeing nothing else to do, for he was more than outnumbered now, bent down and examined him.

As he rose, he said, "He will be dead from loss of blood by morning, no matter if he is properly bandaged."

"Is there nothing that can save him?" whispered the Clutching Hand hoarsely.

"Blood transfusion might save him," replied the doctor. "But so much blood would be needed that whoever gives it would be liable to die himself."

Clutching Hand stood silent a moment, thinking, as he gazed at the man who had been one of his chief reliance. Then, with a menacing gesture, he spoke in a low, bitter tone:

"She who shot him shall supply the blood."

A few quick directions followed to his subordinates, and as he made ready to go he muttered, "Keep the doctor here. Don't let him stir from the room."

It was just before early daybreak when the Clutching Hand and his confederate reached the Dodge house in the city and came up to the back door, over the fences. As they stood there the Clutching Hand produced a master key and started to open the door.

But before he did so he took out his watch.

"Let me see," he ruminated. "Twenty minutes past 4. At exactly half past 4 I want you to do as I told you—see?"

The other crook nodded.

"You may go," ordered the Clutching Hand.

As the crook slunk away Clutching Hand stealthily let himself into the house. Noiselessly he prowled through the halls until he came to Elaine's doorway.

He gave a hasty look up and down the hall. There was no sound. Quickly he took a syringe from his pocket and bent down by the door. Inserting the end under it, he squirted some liquid through, which vaporized rapidly in a wide, fine stream of spray. Before he could give an alarm Rusty was overcome by the noxious fumes, rolled over on his back and lay still.

Outside, the other crook was waiting, looking at his watch. As the hand slowly turned the half-hour he snapped the watch shut. With a quick glance up and down the deserted street, he deftly started up the rain pipe that passed near Elaine's window.

This time there was no faithful Rusty to give warning, and the second intruder, after a glance at Elaine, still sleeping, went quickly to the door, dragged the insensible dog out of the way, turned the key and admitted the Clutching Hand. As he did so he closed the door.

Evidently the fumes had not reached Elaine, or, if they had, the lush of fresh air revived her, for she waked and quickly reached for the gun. In an instant the other crook had leaped at her. Holding his hand over her mouth to prevent her screaming, he snatched the revolver away before she could fire it.

In the meantime the Clutching Hand had taken out some chloroform, and, rolling a towel in the form of a cone, placed it over her face.

When Elaine was completely under the influence of the drug they lifted her out of bed, the chloroform cone still over her face, and quietly carried her to the door, which they had opened stealthily.

Down stairs they carried her until they came to the library with its new safe where they placed her on a couch.

At an early hour an express wagon stopped before the Dodge house and Jennings, half-dressed, answered the bell.

"We've come for that broken suit of armor to be repaired," said a work man.

Jennings let the men in. The armor was still on the stand and the repairers took armor, stand and all, laying it on the couch, where they wrapped it in the covers they had brought for the purpose. They lifted it up and started to carry it out.

"Be careful," cautioned the thrifty Jennings.

Rusty, now recovered, was barking and sniffing at the armor.

"Kick the mutt off," growled one man.

The other did so, and Rusty snarled and snapped at him. Jennings took him by the collar and held him as the repairers went out, loaded the armor on the wagon, and drove off.

Scarcely had they gone, while Jennings straightened out the disarranged library, when Rusty began jumping about, barking furiously. Jennings looked at him in amazement as the dog ran to the window and leaped out.

He had no time to look after the dog, though, for at that very instant he heard a voice calling, "Jennings, Jennings!"

It was Marie, almost speechless. He followed her as she led the way to Miss Elaine's room. There Marie pointed mutely to the bed.

Elaine was not there.

There, too were her clothes, neatly folded, as Marie had hung them for her.

"Something must have happened to her!" wailed Marie.

Jennings was now thoroughly alarmed.

Meanwhile the express wagon outside was driving off, with Rusty tearing after it.

"What's the matter?" cried Aunt Josephine, coming in where the footman and the maid were arguing what was to be done.

She gave one look at her bed, the clothes, and the servants.

"Call Mr. Kennedy!" she cried in alarm.

"Elaine is gone—no one knows how or where," announced Craig, after leaping out of bed that morning to answer the furious ringing of our telephone bell.

When we arrived at the Dodge house Aunt Josephine and Marie were fully dressed. Jennings let us in.

"What has happened?" demanded Kennedy, breathlessly.

While Aunt Josephine tried to tell

Rusty was trying to lead Kennedy down the street.

"Wait here," called Kennedy to Aunt Josephine, as he stepped with me on the running board of the cab. "Go on. Rusty, good dog!"

It seemed miles that we went, but at last we came to a peculiarly deserted looking house. Here Rusty turned in and began scratching at the door. We jumped off the cab and followed.

The door was locked when we tried it, and from inside we could get no answer. We put our shoulders to it and burst it in. Rusty gave a leap forward with a joyous bark.

We followed more cautiously. There were pieces of armor strewn all over the floor. Rusty sniffed at them and looked about, disappointed, then howled.

I looked from the armor to Kennedy in blank amazement.

"Elaine was kidnapped—in the armor," he cried.

He was right. Meanwhile, the armor repairers had stopped at last at this apparently deserted house, a strange sort of repair shop still keeping it wrapped in blankets, they had taken the armor out of the wagon and had laid it down on an old broken bed. Then they had unwrapped it and taken off the helmet.

There was Elaine!

"Sh! What's that?" cautioned one of the men.

They paused and listened. Sure enough, there was a sound outside. They opened the window cautiously.

A dog was scratching on the door, endeavoring to get in. It was Rusty.

"I think it's her dog," said the man, turning. "We'd better let him in. Someone might see him."

The other nodded and a moment later the door opened and in ran Rusty. Straight to Elaine he went, starting to lick her hand.

"Right—her dog," exclaimed the other man, drawing a gun and hastily leveling it at Rusty.

"Don't caution the first. It would make too much noise. You'd better choke him!"

The fellow grabbed for Rusty. Rusty was too quick. He jumped. Around the room they ran. Rusty saw the wide-open window—and his chance. Out he went and disappeared, leaving the man swearing at him.

A moment's argument followed, then they wrapped Elaine in the blankets alone, still bound and gagged, and carried her out.

In the secret den the Clutching Hand was waiting, gazing now and then at his watch, and then at the wounded man before him. In a chair his first assistant sat, watching Doctor Martin

A knock at the door caused them to turn their heads. The crook opened it, and in walked the other crooks who had carried off Elaine in the suit of armor.

Elaine was now almost conscious, as they sat her down in a chair, and partly loosed her bonds and gag. She gazed about, frightened.

"Oh, help! help!" she screamed, as she caught sight of the now familiar mask of the Clutching Hand.

"Call all you want—here, young lady," he laughed unmercifully.

"Now, doc," he added harshly to Doctor Martin. "It was she who shot him. Her blood must save him."

Doctor Martin recoiled at the thought of torturing the beautiful young girl before him.

"Are you willing—to have your blood transfused?" he parleyed.

"No, no, no!" she cried in horror.

Doctor Martin turned to the desperate criminal. "I cannot do it."

"The device you can't."

A cold steel revolver pressed down on Doctor Martin's stomach.

The other crooks next carried Elaine, struggling, and threw her down beside the wounded man.

Doctor Martin, still covered by the gun, bent over the two, the hardened criminal and the delicate, beautiful girl. Clutching Hand glared fiendishly, insanely.

From his bag he took a little piece of something that shone like silver.

A moment later, Doctor Martin looked up at the Clutching Hand and nodded. "Well, it's working!"

All were now bending over the two. Doctor Martin bent closest over Elaine. He looked at her anxiously, felt her pulse, watched her breathing, then pursed up his lips.

"This is—dangerous," he ventured, gazing askance at the grim Clutching Hand.

"Can't help it," came back laconically, and relentlessly.

The doctor shuddered.

The man was a veritable vampire.

Outside the deserted house, Kennedy and I were looking helplessly about.

Suddenly Kennedy reached into his pocket and produced and pulled out a police whistle. He blew three sharp blasts.

Would it bring help?

While we were thus despairing, the continued absence of Doctor Martin from his home had alarmed his family, and had set in motion another train of events.

When he did not return, and could not be located at the place to which he was supposed to have gone, several policemen had been summoned to his house, and they had come, finally, with real bloodhounds from a suburban station.

It had not been long before the party came across the deserted runabout beside the road. There they had stopped for a moment.

It was just then that they heard Kennedy's call, and one of them had been detailed to answer it.

"Well, what do you want?" asked the officer, eyeing Kennedy suspiciously as he stood there with the armor. "What's them pieces of tin—hey?"

Kennedy quickly flashed his own special badge. "I want to trail a girl," he exclaimed hurriedly. "Can I find a bloodhound about here?"

"A hound? Why, we have a pack—over there."

"Bring them—quick!" ordered Craig. Kennedy held the armor down to the dogs. "Searchlight" gave a low whine, then, followed by "Bob" and the others, was off, all with noses close to the ground. We followed.

In the mysterious haunt of the Clutching Hand, all were still standing around Elaine and the wounded Pitts Slim.

Just then a cry from one of the group startled the rest. One of them, less hardened than the Clutching Hand, had turned away from the sight, had gone to the window, and had been attracted by something outside.

"Look!" he cried.

From the absolute stillness of death there was now wild excitement among the crooks.

"Police! Police!" they shouted to each other as they fled by a doorway to a secret passage.

Clutching Hand turned to his first assistant.

"You go, too," he ordered.

The dogs had led us to a strange looking house, and were now baying

"Elaine Was Kidnaped—in the Armor," Cried Kennedy.

and leaping up against the door. We did not stop to knock, but began to break through, for inside we could hear faint sounds of excitement and cries of "Police! Police!"

The door yielded and we rushed into a long hallway. Up the passage we went until we came to another door.

An instant and we were all against it. It was stout, but it shook before us. The panels began to yield.

On the other side of that door from us the master crook stood for a moment. Doctor Martin hesitated, not knowing quite what to do.

Just then the wounded Pitts Slim lifted his hand feebly. He seemed vaguely to understand that the game was up. He touched the Clutching Hand.

"You did your best, chief," he murmured thickly. "Beat it, if you can. I'm a goner, anyway."

Clutching Hand moved over to a panel in the wall and pushed a spring. It slid open and he stepped through. Then it closed—not a second too soon.

At the very moment when we burst in, Doctor Martin, seeing his chance, stopped the blood transfusion, working frantically to stay the flow of blood.

Kennedy sprang to Elaine's side, horrified by the blood that had spattered over everything.

Just then the police burst through the secret panel and rushed on, leaving us alone, with the unconscious, scarcely breathing Elaine.

From the sounds we could tell that they had come to the private room of the Clutching Hand. It was empty.

A policeman now stood beside Elaine and the wounded burglar, who was muttering deliriously to himself.

THE BROKEN CRANKSHAFT

That bearing "knock" in your engine will result in a broken crankshaft, broken crankcase, and broken cylinders besides necessitating a thorough overhauling and replacement of many new minor parts (if you don't have us remedy the "knock" NOW).

If your car's engine is noisy, seems to "knock", hasn't the full amount of power, etc.—see US for we're EXPERTS in engine work and our service is reasonable in cost.

Act NOW.

COUNCIL OF FIFTY

Newton Well Represented on New Planning Board

A Council of Fifty has just been organized with representatives of civic and social organizations interested in an adequate and practical plan for the development of the metropolitan Boston district—in other words, city planning. The various official planning boards of towns and cities surrounding Boston are represented on the Council. This effort at cooperation was launched by the Give and Take Club composed of members of the B. Y. M. C. Union, who started last winter to find out what was essential to develop greater knowledge and interest concerning city planning; and what might be done to secure more consistent and economical action through co-operation on such a plan as has been much talked about and expensively investigated for many years.

Newton is represented by Vernon B. Swett of the Newton Planning Board, Herbert J. Kellaway of Newton, President of the Boston Society of Landscape Architects is also a member of the Council of Fifty.

The Council of Fifty is an advisory body selected from nominations made by the boards and organizations referred to. The appointments were made by the Organization Committee which was formed as a result of two public meetings in The Union Hall, Boston.

The first work to be undertaken by the Council of Fifty and the Executive Committee is along educational lines—to tell in effective ways, that the people may understand, just why a plan for this district is worth while. In the words of Vice Chairman O'Keefe, "the job is to sell city planning to the community."

One of the first matters taken up for consideration is the question of arranging an exhibit in Boston next fall or winter, which will show to the people of this vicinity what has been done by public or private agencies hereabouts, as well as what ideas are in mind for the future, together with a showing of similar efforts in other American cities. From fifteen hundred to twenty-five hundred dollars will be the cost of such an exhibit. It is proposed that a permanent municipal exhibit shall be established jointly by the 25 boards and organizations concerned.

For the present the headquarters of the Council of Fifty will be at 48 Boylston Street, Boston, by the courtesy of the B. Y. M. C. Union.

The Council of Fifty at its first meeting elected as Chairman, J. Randolph Coolidge, Jr., former President of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, and a leading architect much interested in this subject. The Vice Chairman is Patrick F. O'Keefe, former President of the Pilgrim Publicity Association.

The Treasurer is Leslie C. Wead of Brookline, a member of the Brookline Planning Board. The Secretary is E. B. Mero, Social and Civic Secretary of the B. Y. M. C. Union.

The Executive Committee of 11 members will be the active body in the new effort, and is composed as follows: W. R. Greeley, Chairman; Leslie C. Wead, Treasurer; Miss J. A. Brainerd, John N. Cole, Ephraim Harrington, Richard Hittinger, Patrick F. O'Keefe, Arthur A. Shurtliff, Mrs. Frank L. Young. The Chairman and Secretary of the Council of Fifty are ex officio members.

REAL ESTATE NOTES

William J. Cozens of Newton and Newton Highlands has sold for Hugh C. Moses, the new house and garage together with 5897 square feet of land at 36 Canterbury road, Newton Highlands, to John M. Burton of West Medford, who buys for a home.

Also the new house and garage, together with 770 square feet of land at 192 Beethoven avenue, Newton Highlands, for Arthur P. Brown to D. F. Apptison of Boston. The new owner buys for occupancy.

Through the same broker, the Interurban Realty Company has sold to Dora B. Rowe of Newton Centre, a lot of land containing 3000 square feet, more or less, immediately in the rear of estate numbered 692 Commonwealth avenue, Newton Centre, which she recently purchased through the same agency. The land is assessed on $400.

William J. Cozens also reports the following rentals:—Estate 50 Hartford street, Newton Highlands for N. Willis Amoson of Hardwick, Mass., to Louis L. Warren of Boston.

28 Bowers street, Newtonville to A. K. Atkins of Newtonville for F. W. French.

15 Hillside road, Newton Highlands for Margaret J. Lane to S. L. Blood.

15 Hillside road, Newton Highlands for Margaret J. Lane to Eben S. Luther.

JITNEY MEN FINED

In pursuance with their policy of persisting in lower court convictions while waiting for the Superior Court to render a decision on appealed cases, the Newton authorities had representatives of the Waltham Auto Bus Company in court Saturday. Alderman Daniel L. Tickton of Waltham, president of the jitney company, Thomas Canton, a conductor, and Robert Forbe, a chauffeur, were arraigned for violating an ordinance relative to unlicensed hackney carriages. Tickton was fined $20 and each of the others was fined $5, from which all appealed. Their attorney informed the Court that the jitney company meant no disrespect to either the Court or the Newton police in operating its jitney buses pending a higher court decision.

FIELD DAY

Plans are already completed for a large field day to be held Saturday, August 21, by the children of the Stearns Playground, Nonantum. A committee of ladies in the neighborhood, headed by Mrs. John W. Murphy and Mrs. Bradley, are outlining an interesting program for the affair and the playground activities will be presented under the direction of William A. Dorney, Hugh Boyd, Miss Mildred Hickey and Miss Agnes Gavin, the directors.

White House Coffee

The Encyclopedia Britannica speaks of coffee as an "important and valuable article of food used since 875 A.D." Also, "Coffee is exhilarating, lightens the sense of fatigue, and sustains strength under prolonged and severe exertion." What better tribute could be paid to coffee than the above from this world-famous authority?

It describes White House Coffee to the letter. We would only add that "White House" has a flavor never approached by any other coffee; its dependable quality and excellence is secured by expert blending of selections from the Mountain Districts of the Coffee World whence come the sweetest coffees, and the White House Brand is prepared for market and delivered to you just as we pack it in a thoroughly up-to-date coffee establishment, where all the weighing and handling is done by automatic machinery, in rooms continuously supplied with fresh air and flooded with sunlight. 1, 2 and 5 lb. sea of cans only. Never in bulk. All leading grocers.

If you have not tried "White House," you have missed one of the joys of living.

share of the metropolitan sewer, parks, boulevards and water debts of the district. From this gross amount, the assessors are allowed to deduct the estimated receipts of the city, being limited however, to an amount which shall not exceed the actual receipts of the preceding year. They can also deduct the available cash in the city treasury. The next result is the tax levy for that year and this sum is what must be raised upon the valuation of the city as already determined. The rate in this city has usually been fixed at some multiple of twenty cents, the difference between the actual figures of the levy and that raised by the twenty cent figure being the overlay.

When the rate is declared the clerks extend the valuation books by carrying out the amounts to be paid by each tax payer and copy the whole set into a set of books for the use of the collector of taxes. The tax bills are also prepared and both the bills and the collector's books are carefully compared. Each account in the valuation book, the collector's book and the tax bill bear the same number and some idea of the amount of work involved can be gathered from the fact that there are about 18,000 of these accounts the present year. A poll tax is entered eleven times and six different sets of books, most of which number 16 (the number of precincts in the city) are written during the season.

The valuation and collector's books also include such items as sewer apportionments and interest, sewer house connection apportionments and interest, sidewalk and street improvement betterments and interest, and street sprinkling assessments. Copies of the valuation books must also be made and filed at the State House every three years.

Lists of all males between the ages of 18 and 44 who are liable for military service, of owners of dogs, and the names of every person assessed for a poll tax as well as the names of the women who wish to vote for school committee must also be filed annually with the city clerk.

At the close of the season the cards heretofore referred to are arranged alphabetically by the entire city and copied into a book which is of great assistance in locating persons whose particular ward or precinct is not known.

The assessors are in touch with the registry of deeds and the probate court office at East Cambridge and have abstracts of all deeds and wills which affect Newton property or Newton residents.

The fall of the year brings to the assessors the task of housing many earnings on complaints of over valuation of real estate, etc. It is going to note that there is a constant decline in the amount of appeals from this source and it is evident that the public has a wholesome respect for the judgment of our board of assessors.

While the entire subject of taxation is a prominent issue in our political life, it should be remembered that our assessors must administer the law as it is given to them to uphold. Massachusetts has admittedly about as crude and as unscientific laws on taxation as any state in the Union, but until the Legislature adopts some scientific and adequate plan for assessment, our citizens should find no fault with the work of the Assessing department under present conditions.

NORUMBEGA PARK

Great success has inaugurated Norumbega's new plan in theatrical entertainment. Every matinee this week an excellent vaudeville program is presented. Heading the bill is Musical George presenting a very fine act in instrumental novelties. The Three Carousels in a little bit of everything very pleasing, rezier & winning some of the latest songs effectively. Mexican Herman & Co. in a unique exhibition of Mexican Magic, especially please the young people. Every evening this week the spectacular photo play "Neptune's Daughter" is meeting with crowded attendance. Annette Kellerman known as "The Ocean Woman" has the title role and her daring exhibition of diving and swimming is without parallel. This fantasy of the sea was produced at a cost of over $50,000 and scenes were laid in that gem of coral islands Bermuda.

Sunday night Elsie Janis the favorite of all theatre goers will be presented in the charming photo comedy "The Caprices of Kitty." If you are desirous of entertainment, undisturbed, neat and beautiful surroundings visit this resort at Auburndale. Theatres where everything is done for the comfort and safety of all classes. The Zoological Garden with its hundreds of specimens of animals is always of interest. At the Grand Arbor Cafe with its Orchestra, concerts, cuisine and service de luxe are found. Norumbega is the center of canoeing activities in the East and has the finest livery in the world.

SAVINGS BANK LIFE INSURANCE AT SAGO-LOWELL WORKS

An agency for Massachusetts Savings Bank Life Insurance has been established at Sago-Lowell Works, Newton Upper Falls.

Mr. John A. Eaton, one of the instructors of the Massachusetts Savings Insurance League, is at work there explaining to the men the advantages of this form of insurance.

Mr. H. W. Kimball, Field Secretary of the League, spoke to a large group of men recently, and much interest has been aroused.

Mr. Frank J. Hale of Newton, General Agent for the Sago-Lowell Works, is one of the Trustees of the General Insurance Guaranty Fund.

There are now 107,666 policies in force in this State with insurance to the amount of $4,195,631.

The Newton Trust Company is a public agency for the receipt of applications and premiums.

SHUBERT THEATRE—Keen interest has already been aroused by the announcement that "Experience," the modern morality play which ran nine months in New York last season, would be the opening attraction at the Shubert Theatre, beginning on Saturday night, August 28th. The play is a modern up to the minute exposition of the trials and temptations which beset youth when he ventures into the great world, and one reason for its enormous success is that it instinctively recalls to elderly patrons their own struggles and difficulties when they themselves were endeavoring to find "a place in the sun" in the search for success. Yet while the play is a powerful exposition of the "Experiences" which a young man acquires, each of the ten scenes abounds in either comic, dramatic or sentimental incidents. Ernest Glenning will be seen in the role of Youth, Charles A. Stevenson will portray Wealth, Alarich Bowker will assume the role of Experience and there will be a strong company to interpret the 82 speaking roles of this remarkable play. In the cabaret scene showing the Primrose Path of Pleasure, there is a full comic opera chorus, while in this scene there are a higher price, except for the boxes. The balcony will be $1 and less. At the Wednesday matinee the entire lower floor will be only $1. These are unheard of prices for a great Broadway success, but the special scale has been made so that everyone can see "Experience."

FAELTEN SCHOOL IN ITS NINETEENTH SEASON

Among the foremost musical institutions in the country is the Faelten Piano-forte School, 39 Huntington Ave., Boston, which is said to be the largest school in the world exclusively devoted to the study of the piano-forte. Its 19th season will begin Sept. 16.

The courses which include thorough training in the understanding of music, artistic piano-forte playing and music teaching, are taught by a corps of highly trained teachers, each of whom has met with success in his special line.

The children's department is a notable example of what can be accomplished when an artist and educator of the caliber of Carl Faelten is willing to devote himself to this much neglected field. The results achieved are unusual and have received the enthusiastic endorsement of its patrons.

The course for teachers numbers among its graduates many successful exponents who have made a mark in the musical world as concert pianists, composers and teachers. The courses are arranged so that the student works with the greatest efficiency and reaches a high degree of musical development in an unusually short time.

Physicians, clergymen, lawyers, business men, society folk, music teachers and students have contributed unsolicited testimonials.

states in terror for twenty years whilst she has been preparing and biding her time to crush them. They would not have stood it for so long but they feared we might be neutral and if so they would be crushed. Most of our people did not know the truth and the Liberals hoped right up to last July that war might be averted and that we might be friends with Germany and work together for the common good. Now we are awake to what Germany wants and means to have if she can get it!

We do not want or expect America to fight but we do want her to know exactly what we are fighting for so that we may have her sympathy as well as that of all the rest of the civilized world.

We are quite prepared now for another winter campaign and then a dearly won victory either in the early summer or autumn of next year. Our world-wide friendships do not trouble us, they have made a few feeble raids on the coast, but our aeroplanes at Dunkirk make it too dangerous for them to do much. They have only a few Zeppelins and we generally injure or destroy one or more each time. Meanwhile their fleet is very powerful and may make a good fight some day, we long for "the day" when it will come out an fight.

BASE BALL

The decisive game of the West Newton Base Ball League was played on Saturday, August 7, at Allen School Field between the Walnut A. C. and the Elmwoods, both teams being members of Neighborhood House Clubs.

It was a closely contested game from the start and it was not until the 14th inning that the Walnut A. C. made the run which gave them the game and also the championship of the league, their record being won 4, lost 0. This team is the youngest in the league. The score on Saturday was: Walnut A. C. 6, Elmwoods 5, 14 innings.

HOW NEWTON IS GOVERNED

Part of a Series of Articles Explaining the Management of the City

One of the most highly prized depositories of our city life is the Newton Free Library. And yet, I firmly believe that not one person in ten is aware of all its manifold advantages. For our library is considerably more than a depository for books. It is the lover of art with its port of engravings; the musician's music; the traveler with its English and Italian scenery, student with its fine books of reference, as well as the general reader.

The present library is the outgrowth of a literary association formed at the corner in 1848, and which lived the free library idea in 1865. The present site was purchased in 1866, the corner stone of the building laid by the late Hon. J. Wiley Edwards, in 1868. The money for its erection and equipment was raised by public subscription, over $65,000 received, and it was formally opened on June 17, 1870. The library incorporated in 1871 and on the 17th of June, 1870, the library was taken over by the city government.

74 steps were taken to transfer property to the city. This was completed in 1876, when the keys were delivered to the city authorities. The library is managed by a board of trustees appointed by the Mayor, which annually organizes by choice of a president, a secretary, a librarian, and appoints substitutes on library and building. Assistant librarians and a clerk are also appointed by the trustees. The board holds monthly meetings except during July, August and September.

The librarian is the executive officer of the trustees and has the general management of the library, books, and assistants. The main library and branch which the yearly cost of maintenance is about $30,000. It is needless to say that such a position requires as well as literary ability, Newton has always been fortunate in finding the right person to fill the position. The first librarian was Miss Mary, who served for 17 years, and followed temporarily by the Rev. Dr. K. Pierce, whose six months ended on Jan. 1st, 1888. Miss Elizabeth P. Thurston, the present librarian, was his successor and brought to the position an experience of ten years in the library as an assistant. Her work is marked by a thoroughness and conscientiousness which is greatly appreciated by all the books.

The library now contains 90,000 with a circulation in the homes of 300,000 volumes, and about 200 new books are added yearly. 30 papers and 150 magazines are taken. Books are usually selected by the librarian, who regularly visits the various book stores from which new books are sent on approval. These books are read or examined by the librarian or by competent persons selected by her, and if approved, are purchased for the library. Several copies of popular books in fiction are usually purchased. The purchase of the more expensive books requires the approval of the trustees.

The library can be roughly classified numerically as follows: fiction, 19,000; history, travel and biography, 21,000; social sciences, 5,000; arts and sciences, 13,000; literature and periodicals, 20,000; philosophy and religion, 3,000; reference, 9,000. About 62 per cent of the total circulation is prose fiction.

Every resident of the city is entitled to draw books on presentation of an application, and may take as many volumes as he desires, providing one only is fiction. School teachers, both public and private, are entitled to books for pupils as well as for their own use. Teachers who reside but do not teach in Newton may also benefit by this provision, also any person whose business is in Newton, even if residing outside the city.

The president or chairman of clubs may have books for club use, excepting, however, new and popular works, and in every way the library assists and encourages the circulation of its wealth of literature. Over 13,000 names have been registered since the inauguration of the present card system in 1911.

It is also interesting to learn that photographs of paintings and sculpture, pictures of birds, views of scenery, etc., may also be taken out on cards in the same way as books. This is also true of stereoscopic views which are circulated with the stereoscope, and over 1000 volumes and portfolios of music are also available for general circulation.

One of the latest innovations of the library is a series of lantern slides for stereoscopic use. The library has between four and five thousand slides which may be taken out on cards as books are drawn. A catalogue of these has just been printed, which shows of what the collection consists. Magazines are also circulated singly, after current use in the reading room and later when bound into volumes.

A card catalogue is constantly kept up to date, and in position for popular use. Card catalogues of the current additions are also to be found at eight of the branches. Catalogues are also published, and monthly bulletins for free distribution. Weekly bulletins are inserted in the Newton papers.

MUST DEFEAT GERMANY

Swiss Writer Believes That Civilization Depends on Success of Allies

The following letter has just been received by Mr. George D. Davis of West Newton, from an official of the Red Cross, located in Geneva and who has, as an official of a Masonic Benefit Society, been in special charge of work among members of that order. The writer is a native of Switzerland.

Geneva, Acacias.

Dear Brother Davis,
I wrote you on June 26th a card advising a registered letter containing 23 pages of matter from Mr. Minck. I hope you got it all right.

I had yours of the 14th June, and papers, thanks, and if I have not yet answered, the above heading shows you why and what I have been up to. I am so awfully tired of Masonic show off, jabber and speeches that I am trying to get our brethren to do a little ground work. May this be a small beginning!

Now, dear Brother, you have covered me with flowers! Why did you do it? Your good heart prompted you, but you shouldn't. When a man tries to do something towards human advancement, he is only in what should be a normal state and too much admiration is a severe criticism of the others, and bad for himself! Pray don't, it only makes me feel unworthy of your praise. I fully reciprocate your feeling of friendship and that, created between us by chance (is there any such thing?) is a gain to be truly grateful for.

I don't think I misunderstand, nor do many others, American motives in the patience displayed towards Germany. We all know your people are brave and powerful, and the majority has a proper ideal.

But this war is a deliberate enslaving of an obedient race (German) by an unscrupulous military and aristocratic oligarchy, which had succeeded in hypnotizing its subjects into a belief of a defensive war, when the real object of the rulers is wholesale, or more rightly, mundial plunder and political and racial supremacy. This is what Americans have not realized yet, to the astonishment and disappointment of the really advanced (in higher morality) nations of Europe. This is the rock bottom question for us: freedom of races or nations to dispose of themselves—to us holier than peace—There is a secondary question: the strife between the political systems of republics (England being the greatest and freest, freer than Switzerland) and monarchies. We will have no masters that we do not ourselves appoint, and depose at will. Germans, Austrians and Turks and so on are content to be led by strong wills; they are still in infancy—their

RIVER DAY

Water Sports and Brilliant Carnival at Riverside

River Day was observed last Saturday on the Charles River at Riverside by a long list of water sports in the afternoon and an illuminated carnival in the evening. The program attracted hundreds of canoeists and the banks were crowded with spectators.

The affair was under the direction of the Auburndale and Riverside Canoe Association, with Mr. John Gaw, Jr., of the Norumbega Boat House as chairman and assisted by T. Leroy Ogden of the Waltham Canoe Club; Albert Coleman of the Riverside Recreation Grounds, clerk of course; George P. Moyle, Waltham Canoe Club, starter; Fred Blodgett, Dedham, H. L. Alken, American Canoe Association, and S. T. James, Riverside Club, judges. The racing was under the direction of Harry D. Swisher, E. C. Calkin and L. H. Redfield.

Arthur Sadler of the Terminal boat-house delighted the audience during the afternoon with an exhibition in walking on the water. The summary: 50-Yard Swim—Won by C. Morris, Terminal; G. Morris, Terminal, second. 100-Yard Swim—Won by C. Morris, Terminal; M. Connolly, Terminal, second.

Girls' Single Canoe Races—Won by Bertha Edmonds, Norumbega; Ethel Russell, Norumbega, second. Men's Singles—Won by H. Hutchinson, Norumbega; P. Razoux, Norumbega, second.

Men's Doubles—Won by McGrath and Crosby, Gray & Frost; Hutchinson and Welch, Norumbega, second.

FOUND DEAD

Mysterious Death of Ernest L. Hovey A Linesman of the Edison Co.

The death of Ernest L. Hovey, a linesman employed by the Edison Co. some time Thursday morning is the subject of considerable speculation. Mr. Hovey was at work on Centre place with Mr. Charles K. Pierce of the same Company until two o'clock that morning and when the men parted Mr. Pierce assumed that Hovey would go directly to his home on Channing street. About 7 o'clock Allen Cady of Avon place noticed the body on the side of the railroad tracks directly in the rear of the Engine station on Washington street. Mr. Hovey had in one hand a short piece of the railing of the board fence which adjoins the rear of the engine house, and there were tufts of grass in the other hand. It is presumed that in attempting to climb the fence from the railroad side the rail broke and the man rolled down the bank and dropped some fifteen feet to the tracks below, crushing his skull and probably causing instant death. Just why he should have been in that locality at that time of the night is a mystery as his home is in an entirely different direction. Mr. Hovey was 34 years of age and is survived by a widow.

And the beauty of a get-rich scheme is also skin deep.

Impatient men seldom accomplish anything of great importance. There comes a time in the life of every man when he feels justified in kicking himself.

REPORT OF AUDITING COMMITTEE

To the President and Directors of The Newton Trust Co., Gentlemen:

The Committee of the Stockholders, appointed under the provisions of the statute, to make an examination of the business of the Bank, as required by our By-laws, have the honor to submit herewith the report of Messrs. Ewer & Neal, whom we have employed to perform the technical part of the examination and whose figures we adopt as our own.

In addition to the examination made by the experts, upon whom we rely for the presentation of facts, the Committee has personally gone over in a very thorough manner the entire report and investigated the several transactions, compared a large number of the statements and reports upon the various loans and is glad to report its cordial appreciation of the good condition of the bank's business and the fine showing which it makes.

We find its business in good condition, its loans in very good condition, and its affairs prosperous.

The report, in duplicate, has been handed to the Treasurer.

Very respectfully,

HENRY H. KENDALL
CHARLES E. KELSEY
ALBERT P. CARTER

PRIMARY NOMINATIONS CLOSED

List of Candidates for Representatives, City Committee and Delegates to State Convention

The Registrars of Voters held the last session to certify names of nominations for the coming state primary, on Saturday night and Tuesday was the last day for filing papers with the secretary of the Commonwealth.

Besides the contests for the various state offices in both the leading parties, Newton is particularly interested in several district fights.

In Middlesex County, there are contests in the Republican party for nominations for sheriff between Sheriff Fairbairn and Mr. A. B. Messer, for county treasurer between County Treasurer Joseph O. Hayden and Mr. T. Edward McLean of Somerville, and for County Commissioner between Commissioner Chester B. Williams and Mr. John L. Dyer, Councillor Henry C. Mulligan and State Senator George H. Ellis will have no opposition.

Representatives J. Weston Allen and Thomas Weston, Jr., will be unopposed while Alderman Henry W. Jarvis and J. C. Brimblecom will contest for the seat vacated by the retirement of Mr. Bothfield.

Messrs. James A. Waters, John P. Tierney and William J. Geegan are unopposed for the Representative nominations in the Democratic party.

The nominees for city committee and for delegates to state conventions of the Republican and Democratic parties are as follows:—

EDITORIAL

The remarkable series of speeches which Senator Lodge is delivering in the present political campaign, ought to ensure a large attendance of Newton Republicans at the outing arranged for Saturday, August 28 at the Riverside Recreation grounds. While Senator Lodge will be the principal speaker, Mr. McCall, Mr. Cushing, Mr. Ham and Mr. Coolidge will be present also and it will be an excellent opportunity to size up the various candidates for office.

Officials of the Newton Board of Health have been making a careful investigation of the milk supply of the city, visiting many dairies in Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Vermont. Too much emphasis cannot be placed upon the importance of this work.

CLAFLIN GUARD VETERANS

The Claflin Guard Veteran Association held its first outing at Pemberton and Nantasket Wednesday afternoon and evening and it was a great success.

There were many attractions appreciated by all and a fine Shore Dinner at the "Villa Napoli," Nantasket. Boats, autos and trains conveyed the party to all the different points of interest.

This Association has awakened to the fact that something more must be done to keep up the interest and get new members besides having a Dinner once a year, and as this outing proved such a success it is the intention of the Board of Officers to make it an annual affair.

A number of new members have been admitted recently and an effort is being made to double the membership.

It is also intended sometime during the Fall to organize a Rifle Team from the Association to compete with a similar Team from the Active Company for the Silver Cup which the Association won at the last Shoot.

CANDIDATE FOR SHERIFF

For the first time in the recollection of the present generation, there is a contest on in Middlesex County for the Republican nomination for sheriff, and Adelbert B. Messer of Concord Junction who has chosen to come forth as a contestant for the nomination against Sheriff John R. Fairbairn, has caused such a stir in the Republican ranks that the old line Stand Patters are wondering just what has happened.

For more than half a century the Republican officials of Middlesex County were very quietly designated by the old time party leaders in caucus, and the introduction of the Primary laws have badly ruffled the old leaders and at the present time they appear to be floundering, not knowing exactly where they are at.

This year they are sorely perplexed because a young man from the western part of Middlesex County has had the temerity to rise in opposition to the present sheriff of 17 years standing.

While the younger element in the fast reorganizing Republican Party, readily sees and gratefully accepts the reasons for the Messer candidacy there are hundreds who have not yet awakened to the realization that Middlesex County needs a lot of new blood if she is to retain her position as a Republican stronghold, which has already been seriously threatened by the election of a Democratic District Attorney.

Mr. Messer says "I am a candidate because I can see the handwriting on the wall, and realize only too well that the time has come for the Republican Party in Middlesex County to get out of its shell and do something that will justify its existence."

"The approaching election in this state is to be of far greater consequence to the Republican Party, not only of the county and state but the Nation as well, than any other election since the conception of the party."

"Here in Middlesex we are of great importance as reflecting on the Party throughout the Commonwealth, and it is here that the young Republicans who desire to see the successful culmination of the reorganization of the party, must put our shoulders to the wheel and do some good hard work."

"The Progressives who broke away from us in 1912 are now only standing on the threshold awaiting their opportunity to step back into the Republican ranks."

"But they will not take this step unless we who are now there extend a pressing invitation and that invitation must be carved out of the bright future, insuring a rejuvenation of the conditions within the party which three years ago drove these same Progressives from our ranks."

"There is but one way in which to do this. It must be done with new timber."

BOSTON TOWER ATTRACTS VISITORS

Customs Officials Find New Quarters Convenient and Efficient—To Start Big Clock on Labor Day

When the Secretary of the Treasury came to Boston a few days ago his first call was at the Federal Reserve Bank, where he spent a brief time in conference with Governor Aiken and Federal Reserve Agent Curtiss. Then, with the bank governor, he walked down State street to visit the government sky-scraper.

The Custom House, of course. Or, the Boston Tower, as it is coming to be called by the thousands of travelers who see it as the first Boston landmark on their approach to the city.

Mr. McAdoo found Collector Billings and his staff conveniently settled in their new quarters, which comprise the first sixteen stories of the building. "Conveniently" is exactly the word, for despite the ominous forecasts that the distribution of offices through many floors would be time-wasting and energy-wasting, the Collector has found that the arrangement works splendidly. A pneumatic tube service connects all of the departments. The elevator service is speedy and efficient. And the distribution of departments through the several stories gives them ideal quarters, light, airy, and comfortable.

A Lookout for Visitors

An average of five hundred visitors call at the Custom House every day and go up to its twenty-fifth story to take a look at Boston and the suburbs. From that vantage point, more than 400 feet above the street level, the view on a sunny day is superb, taking in everything within a very wide horizon. The tower is open to sightseers daily between the hours of 9 A. M. and 3.35 P. M.

Arrangements are now being made for installing the works of the gigantic clock, which occupies a conspicuous place in the upper tower. The clock will be electrically operated and controlled from a master clock stationed about twenty stories below. The dials, facing four directions, are twenty-one and a half feet in diameter. At night the clock will be illuminated. There will be electric lights in numerals, which are three feet long. The hands will be lighted from pivot to tip, the minute hand tipped with a green light and the hour hand with red. It is planned to start the clock on Labor Day.

Various federal bureaus in Boston have been assigned to the six floors above the sixteenth, which have been fitted for occupancy. The branch office of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce will be installed here, as will the Lighthouse Board, the Bureau of Animal Industry, and other government agencies—Current Events.

NEWTON BOY MAKES GOOD

Harrison P. Eddy, Jr., of 65 Gray Cliff road, Newton Centre, has received a distinct mark of the approval and esteem of his comrades at the M. I. T. Summer Surveying Camp in his election to be chairman of the entertainment committee. Mr. Eddy is a sophomore at Tech just ready to enter his junior year and being in the civil engineering courses takes the work at camp as part of the regular studies.

The principle of student government, which Technology has developed to its fullest extent leaves matters of control of the camp in the hands of the young men and various committees have been elected. That on entertainment is an important one, for the townspeople of Machias and East Machias come occasionally to camp celebrations, while an entertainment is provided each summer by the students for the townspeople. This is in the general nature of a minstrel show followed by a dance, the proceeds of which are devoted to some worthy object. The Tech boys are famous for their talents in entertaining and the show is always a good one. At the present camp there are no less than half-a-dozen skilled pianists, one or two violinists and some playing other instruments. The evenings are spent very pleasantly about the piano with songs and music, the latter of which runs the gamut from classical to rag-time with its syncopations and rubato. Mr. Eddy's companions on the committee are, Richard T. Whitney of Allston and Kenneth K. Lane of Winchester.

SENATOR LODGE TO SPEAK

The Republicans of this city will have a splendid opportunity to hear Senator Henry Cabot Lodge speak at the outing which has been arranged to be held on Saturday, August 28, at the Riverside Recreation Grounds.

In addition to Senator Lodge, the speakers will be Samuel W. McCall, Grafton Cushing, Guy Ham, Mr. Coolidge and Cong. William H. Carter.

Tickets for the outing are selling fast here and every Republican in this city is urged to attend the big event at the Recreation Grounds on August 28.

A program of special features has been arranged and will include a baseball game between the Waltham Watch Co. team and the Newton Catholic Club nine; an exhibition in swimming by a team from the Free Reading Room, and a tennis match between Waltham and Wellesley teams.

A FEW AUTOMOBILES

More than 2,000,000 motor cars and trucks are registered in the United States, according to a compilation made in the current number of The Automobile. The exact figures, after all deductions for duplication have been made, are 2,070,903 motor vehicles registered in the several States on July first. This is an increase of 334,809 registrations since the first of the year.

New York leads with a total of 185,767 and Ohio is second with 152,950. Illinois is a close third with 151,832. California fourth with 138,600. Pennsylvania fifth with 128,062 and Iowa is sixth with 117,407. Michigan has 93,669. Minnesota 82,000. Indiana 81,208. While Massachusetts is credited with 76,168. Texas is next to Massachusetts with 72,433.

Shall the Proposed Amendment to the Constitution enabling Women to Vote be Approved and Ratified

YES

During the week Concord Grange and Sterling Grange went on record in favor of Woman Suffrage. Within the past six weeks, the following prominent Granges have put themselves on record as favoring the Constitutional Amendment enabling women to vote: Beverly, Hamilton, Wrentham, Somerville, Winchester, Woburn, Wilmington, Braintree, Everett, Marshfield, Stoneham, Lexington, Melrose, Dracut, Tyngsboro, Riverdale of Gloucester, West Gloucester, Duxbury, Concord and Sterling.

SINGLE TAXERS ASSUME SUCCESS

Women's Henry George League Wants to Educate Against Palliative Legislation

Single tax advocates belonging to the Women's Henry George League, assuming the success of the suffrage campaign in New York, Massachusetts, New Jersey and Pennsylvania this fall, are starting out now to win over the 6,500,000 women voters who will be added to the electorate if suffrage wins. The work is to be done by a recently formed committee on new voters, of which Mrs. Joseph Fels is honorary chairman and Mrs. Mary Ware Dennett chairman.

Their object is to prevent the women in the Eastern States from "wasting their time in palliative legislation," but to show them what they consider the biggest work for the woman voter.

BRYAN ASKS FOR WOMAN'S VOICE

Former Secretary Says She Should Help Determine Standards in International Affairs

William Jennings Bryan in an address before the recent International Conference of Women Workers, made a plea for the woman's voice in international affairs, according to the San Francisco Star:

"Has she (woman) no right to a voice in determining the standards which shall be invoked in international affairs? Has she no right to protest against the attempt to define national honor in the same terms that individual honor was determined when dueling was the custom? Under the Pellet's code of honor the husband could not consider the welfare of his family; he must avenge an insult with his life or be branded as a coward. Must we adopt as the standard of national honor that false standard of individual honor which was repudiated when the practice of dueling was prohibited?"

"In deciding what is necessary for the maintenance of national honor, women not only have a right to a voice, but she is in duty bound to give expression to her views, or she may suffer the penalty of having her rights overridden and her interests disregarded by those who, either because of a special interest or, because of a mistaken view, have a false impression as to what national honor requires."

WHY NOT?

If a resolution upon any subject of public interest were passed unanimously by the Legislature of New York, or by that of Massachusetts, Pennsylvania or New Jersey, it would be a conclusive proof that the resolution expressed the prevailing sentiment of that State at that time. It would mean either that all the legislators, without exception, were behind what the resolution said; or else that those who thought differently were so sure the resolution expressed the majority opinion of their constituents that they did not dare to dissent.

Everybody realizes the truth of this, in the case of his own Legislature. One who not recognize it in the case of California, and those other enfranchised States whose Legislatures have passed unanimous resolutions testifying that equal suffrage works well, and advising other States to adopt it?

INTERESTING EXHIBIT

A very fine exhibition of mushrooms, poison and edible, was given Monday afternoon by the Boston Mycological Club, at Massachusetts Horticultural Hall.

There were 114 different varieties on exhibit, from Boston and vicinity, and other parts of Massachusetts and from Ohio, Maine and Vermont.

One large specimen from Beverly was 3 1/2 feet wide and 2 1/2 feet tall and weighed about 20 pounds. It is called Polyporus Berkleyi.

These interesting and instructive exhibitions take place every Monday from 12 until 3 o'clock, and the public is cordially invited.

At the close of the exhibition, members of the Mycological Club gave a mushroom dinner in honor of Mrs. Flora Patterson of the Pathological Department of Agriculture at Washington, D. C., at which twelve different varieties of mushrooms were served. Among the guests present from Newton, were the Misses Allen of Central avenue.

THE CHEERFUL CHERVIL

The breeze touched the cotton-wood tree with a wand
And its leaves turned to silver a minute—
I just get surprised at this whole world sometimes,
And the marvelous things that are in it!

NO

Suffrage distinctly lessens the moral influence of women, and puts the power gained through the increase of the electorate into the hands of the boss, male or female, who can control the largest female vote.

The corrupt woman's vote is mainly in large cities, a very few of which govern the rest of the state. This fact should be a warning to the country districts against votes for women. It will get worse as the newer states get more cities, manufactures, and mining interests in them.

The New York Commercial says: "The ward politicians in the larger cities are able to control the votes of the undesirable elements more easily in the case of women than of men."

The "Literary Digest" of July 31 says of the "War-Babies" scare: "In the whole history of the invidious art of flogging one's own nest there has probably never been so complete a masterpiece as the war-babies outcry of a few weeks ago." In these words the Manchester Guardian stigmatizes a rumor that spread like wildfire, multiplied columns of newspapers, and was noticed in these pages, regarding the unscrupulous immorality of the British army in the neighboring training camps.

A careful investigation by the British National Union of Women Workers shows that there has been no increase in illegitimate births in England since the war began. Commenting on which Mrs. A. J. George said recently: "It must be reckoned with as part of the psychology of the suffrage movement, for it was by suffragists alone in this country that the alleged war-babies scare was spread, and it was spread as another 'reason' why women should vote! In England the militants made capital out of the movement by promising to found an institution for the care of the mythical babies, and the feminists made capital out of it as a basis for their claim that modern conditions make the 'old-fashioned' marriage ceremony a relic of barbarism."

It was announced that Mrs. Pankhurst was to come to this country to collect money for these war-babies—which do not exist. Another suffrage march's nest exploded!

The Survey of July 10, 1915, gives a report on the social legislation in various states during the last year, which is of peculiar interest to anti-suffragists. It says that the fourteenth session on the Washington legislature adjourned without having taken any forward step in social legislation. The Mothers' Pension Law was amended so that it is no longer to be applicable to mothers abandoned by their husbands, and the required period of residence in the state was extended from one to three years. An amendment to the workman's compensation act providing first aid to the injured was defeated. A bill to establish a state labor exchange the same as that in New York was quickly killed. A bill providing for one day's rest in seven in mechanical and mercantile establishments was also killed. The uniform child labor bill was indefinitely postponed and the Washington white slave act adapting the Mann act to traffic within the state, was denied a place on the calendar for the house. A bill making school social centers was also indefinitely postponed. It is probable that only a threatened exercise of the veto power of the governor prevented the passage of certain bills not conducive to public morals. It was probably only a threatened veto also which prevented the passage of bills re-submitting the liquor question to the people before the present prohibition law goes in to operation. Washington is a woman suffrage state.

ARKANSAS

The Arkansas assembly during its 1915 session helped materially to improve social conditions. A minimum wage law was passed, the provisions of which are that no woman shall be permitted to work in any manufacturing, or mercantile establishment or for an express or transportation company for more than nine hours in any one day or 54 hours in any one week. No woman under eighteen should be employed in any establishment before the hour of seven in the morning or after nine in the evening of any one day. Prohibition was passed, the law to go into effect Jan. 1, 1916. A commission on the feeble minded was established. This passed without a dissenting vote. A bill preventing the sale of narcotics was passed. Bills providing a better industrial school for boys and creating a girls industrial school, passed both houses, by a vote of approximately five to one, but were vetoed only because there was not sufficient funds to carry them out. Arkansas is a male suffrage state.

FLORIDA

"The best legislation, in every sense of the word, that has met in the state for a good many years" is the tribute paid to the session of the Florida lawmakers just ended. The child labor law was strengthened. An exceptionally strong vital statistics bill was passed. A commission was appointed to study the need for a Mothers' Pension law in Florida and the best method of administering the same. Another commission was appointed to study the need and best method of providing an institution for the feeble minded, and epileptics. The first industrial school for girls in the state was established. A law was passed appropriating one hundred thousand dollars to rebuild the boys industrial school which was recently burned. The first separate juvenile court in Florida was provided and the juvenile court law was strengthened. Florida is a male suffrage state.

MAINE

Maine also makes an excellent showing in the social legislation passed this last winter. An act prohibiting the placing of children in almshouses and requiring children's homes whether free or boarding to be licensed was passed. An act was passed for relief of the needy blind residents of Maine. A state reformatory for women to which all women of over sixteen years shall be committed was provided, as well as state tuberculosis sanatoriums in such districts of the state as it seemed best to serve the needs of the people. A 54-hour law limiting the number of hours of employment per week for women and minors in certain industries was passed. The law that authorized the binding out of minors under fourteen years of age was repealed. The examination and registration of nurses was covered by an act creating a state Board of Examination and Registration. An excellent child labor law was passed. There were also passed two workmen's compensation acts making payment for injury to workmen in certain occupations charged upon the business. Maine is a male suffrage state.

HOW TO TREAT THE PUBLIC

Dr. Frank Crane Takes a Certain Ticket Agent As An Object Lesson

Almost everybody knows Dr. Frank Crane, the writer of articles containing homely truths with respect to everyday conduct in life. Possessing a wide knowledge of human nature through his experiences as a clergyman, Dr. Crane has been able to point out little deficiencies in human conduct in such an engaging manner as to give his articles an extensive vogue. Recently in one of his little talks Dr. Crane gave some advice on how to treat the public, citing as an object lesson Jim Healy, a railroad ticket agent of Worcester, Mass., where Dr. Crane once had a church. This is the article:

"Listen! all ye who handle the public, and I will tell you something to your advantage.

"I mean you telephone girls, street car conductors, waiters at table, lunch counter attendants, railway ticket agents, and brakemen, tellers in banks, and clerks in department stores, and anybody else whose business it is to deal with the members of the common crowd.

"I will take my text from the words of Miss Minnie Warner, the highest paid switchboard operator of the Chicago Telephone Company, as reported in the newspapers. Said she:

"Don't be mechanical. Make every man on the wire believe that your soft tones are for him alone." Furthermore, she said:

"Don't be indifferent. Make every kisser believe you are brokenhearted because the line is busy."

"I take my text also to Miss Warner, and if my wife will let me I would like to send her a bunch of flowers.

"It is a great temptation for the busy clerk to drop into machinelike ways. It does not require so much vitality.

"But it is a mistake. I do not refer so much to the feelings of the customer, for perhaps you may not care a hoot how he or she feels, and all you want to do is to fill your time and get your wages. Besides, you may be so sorry for yourself that you haven't any sorry left for customers. Hence, we won't discuss the sentimental side of the question.

"Let us go to the strictly business and selfish side. Do you know that your greatest asset is being HUMAN? Ah! you reply, 'I'm so tired and worn out that I have no vitality left to palaver over people.'

"Then PUT ON politeness. I mean it. Act the part, if you cannot feel it. Form the habit of smiling, pretend to be deeply interested in each person, learn how to make your voice sympathetic, lay in a store of agreeable phrases to hand out to each one.

"This is not hypocrisy. It is business.

"Do you realize that it is the HUMAN clerk that is in demand, that attracts customers, that stands the best chance for promotion?

"The public is a great baby,' somebody said. It's true. I'm one of 'em. I confess I feel a sour-ball clerk as I would a soured glass of milk. Why not humor the public, then?

"I know a ticket agent in Worcester, Mass. His name is Jim Healy. I consider him the best agent in the United States. Because you can't get him out of humor. I used to go into his office and pretend to want a railway ticket just to get under his delightful influence.

"One day a wealthy and rude old lady, as soon as she had paid her fare, was so cranky when they got old and insolent when they are of the first families in town, came into Healy's office. He was busy at his desk. A pile of letters was stacked up at his right hand. He was behind in his correspondence, in which state of things you or I would be irritable.

"The old lady drew up a chair, sat down by him and with one sweep of her hand scattered all his letters over the floor.

"Now," she said, "you attend to me!" Healy turned around, laid down his pen, shook hands with his visitor, and said, smiling:

"Now, do you know, Mrs. Jones, you've taken a load off my mind. I was just wishing I could get rid somehow of these pesky letters. Please tell me what I can do for you."

"He sold that woman over seven hundred dollars' worth of steamer tickets.

"Why snap at people? Why show impatience? Why treat them with indifference? It's all in a lifetime. It's all part of the game.

"And nine-tenths of your game, believe me, is making people feel pleasant.

"Are you afraid of being treated like a dog? Do you want to assert your manhood? Then assert it by not descending to the yellow-dog level of the insolent customer.

"Be human! Because you are a telephone girl you don't have to cultivate a pie-crust voice, dead and repulsive. As a street car conductor you can say a cheery word to the tired old woman with a basket. As a brakeman you can make a whole coach full of people warm in the cozies of their hearts.

"Be human, Sade, even at your counter in the department store. Take it from me, it's money in your pocket; besides, you'll think more of yourself."

THE CHEERFUL CHERUB

Oh, please excuse these few sad tears,
My cream-puff I just bit
When all the goo-stuff
Slithered out
The other end of it.
In times of woe, however I'm grateful for one thing
And that is that I still can cry—
Tears are so comforting

THE SECTARIAN AMENDMENT

The following letter written by Mr. Samuel J. Elder to Mr. Frank W. Stearns of this city in regard to the agitation for an amendment to the constitution of the state prohibiting the use of public money for sectarian purposes, ought to settle the matter in the minds of all reasonable persons, for Mr. Elder stands at the head of the legal profession and his opinion will have considerable weight.

Dear Mr. Stearns: I have your favor of the 3d instant and in reply thereto give you the provisions of the constitution of Massachusetts with regard to the appropriation of funds for the public schools, etc., with memoranda of the decisions of the supreme court relating thereto:

The last clause of article XI. of the amendments to the constitution of Massachusetts is as follows:

And all the religious sects and denominations, demeaning themselves peaceably, and as good citizens of the commonwealth, shall be equally under the protection of the law, and no subordination of any one sect or denomination to another shall ever be established by law.

The 15th amendment to the constitution of Massachusetts is as follows:

All moneys raised by taxation in the towns and cities for the support of public schools, and all moneys which may be appropriated by the state for the support of common schools, shall be applied to and expended in, no other schools than those which are conducted according to law, under the order and superintendence of the authorities of the town or city in which the money is to be expended; and such moneys shall never be appropriated to any religious sect for the maintenance, exclusively, of its own school.

This last amendment has been several times construed by the supreme court of Massachusetts. Merrick et al against inhabitants of Amherst 94 Massachusetts 500, in which it was held as follows:

The object of the provision is to regulate the expenditure of money raised by towns or cities for general educational purposes and to confine it strictly to the support of the common or public schools which every town is required to maintain under the general laws establishing a uniform system of education for children and youth throughout the state, and also to restrain the raising of money by taxation for the support of schools of a religious and sectarian character.

It is held that this applies to the public schools and common schools, but not to the higher seminaries of learning, such as incorporated academies and colleges, such, for instance, as the Amherst Agricultural college.

Jenkins against inhabitants of Andover, 103 Massachusetts, 84: It was held that the town of Andover could not appropriate money to aid the trustees of the Pynchard free school, though a majority of the trustees were elected by the inhabitants of the town, and though the legislature, by chap. 396 of the Acts of 1869, had authorized them so to do. The reason was that the other trustees were required to be members of certain specified churches, to wit: Christ Church, South parish, and the West Parish Congregational Church.

In 1913, replying to a joint order of the legislature, the supreme court replied, 214 Massachusetts Reports, 599, as follows:

Article 2 of the declaration of rights and article 11 of the amendments to the constitution of the commonwealth absolutely prohibit the enactment of any law establishing any particular religion or restraining the free exercise of any particular religion.

Article 18 of the amendments to the constitution of the commonwealth, relating to moneys raised by taxation in the towns and cities for the support of public schools requires that such moneys shall be disbursed exclusively for the support of such common schools and shall not be diverted to any other kind of school maintained in whole or in part by any religious sect. But there is no constitutional prohibition of appropriations for high educational institutions, societies or undertakings under sectarian or ecclesiastical control.

Whether the existing provisions of the constitution and its amendments "adequately prohibit" the appropriation of public money for aiding any church, religious denomination or religious society, so that there is no "necessity for the adoption of an amendment" to this end, was said to be rather a legislative question than a question of law, a majority of the justices expressing an opinion that such an appropriation is prohibited already.

I trust this fully answers your inquiry.

With cordial regards, sincerely yours,
SAMUEL J. ELDER.

REGARDING MILK

It is not too much to say that New York city has taken steps that mark the beginning of the end of tuberculosis. That is the effect reasonably to be expected from the rigid enforcement of the regulations adopted by the Board of Health requiring the pasteurization of all milk, including certified.

This policy has for its purpose the exclusion of live virulent tubercle bacilli from the daily diet of human beings. In requiring the pasteurization of much of the milk supply a great advance was made. In requiring the pasteurization of all the milk sold in this city, whatever its pretensions to purity, Dr. Goldwater has set absolute safety above theoretical.

This regulation is an embargo upon the germs of tuberculosis and of six other infectious diseases—typhoid and scarlet fevers, diphtheria, septic sore throat, summer complaint, and foot and mouth disease. It will deliver the people from the common source of these infections.

For this action the Board of Health deserves unstinted praise, and it would be less than just to fail to include in the appreciation the twenty-three years' work of Nathan Straus, who blazed the way for this life-saving regulation by his pioneer work in the protection of infant life and the prevention of tuberculosis.

From this regulation there should be no retreat. The requirement should be permanent. The danger of infection with the foot and mouth disease is relatively small; the transmission of tuberculosis is the big peril met and overcome by pasteurization.

THE GROWTH OF SAVINGS BANK LIFE INSURANCE

The reports of the Savings Insurance Banks in Massachusetts show that in the month of July 604 policies were issued, with insurance to the amount of $150,458. This is the largest amount ever written in any one month. There are now in force 10,766 policies for insurance amounting to $4,125,631.

It has been decided to issue children's insurance at all ages, from one year of age upward. These policies are now being prepared by the State Actuary.

The Savings Insurance Banks have just issued a group policy covering the lives of 156 employees at W. & A. Bacon Company, Boston.

Mr. J. Russell Marble, one of the leading business men of Worcester, has been appointed a Trustee of the General Insurance Guaranty Fund by Governor Walsh.

Since November 1, 1915, twenty-five new agencies have been established in various factories, Savings Banks and Trust Companies. There are now nearly 300 agencies in manufacturing establishments in Massachusetts.

The Exploits of Elaine

A Detective Novel and a Motion Picture Drama

The Well-Known Novelist and the Creator of the "Craig Kennedy" Stories

Presented in Collaboration With the Pathe Players and the Eclectic Film Company

Copyright, 1914, by the Star Company All Foreign Rights Reserved

SYNOPSIS.

The New York police are mystified by a series of murders and other crimes. The principal clue to the criminal is the warning letter which is sent the victims, signed with a "clutching hand." The latest victim of the mysterious assassin is Taylor Dodge, the insurance president. His daughter, Elaine, employs Craig Kennedy, the famous scientific detective, to try to unravel the mystery. What Kennedy accomplishes is told by his friend Jameson, a newspaper man. Enraged at the determined effort which Elaine and Craig Kennedy are making to put an end to his crimes, the Clutching Hand, as this strange criminal is known, resorts to all sorts of the most diabolical schemes to put them out of the way. Each chapter of the story tells of a new plot against their lives and of the way the great detective uses all his skill to save this pretty girl and himself from death.

SEVENTH EPISODE

The Double Trap.

Mildred of the sage advice that a time of peace is best employed in preparing for war, I was busily engaged in cleaning my automatic gun one morning as Kennedy and I were seated in our living room.

Our door buzzer sounded, and Kennedy, always alert, jumped up, pushing aside a great pile of papers which had accumulated in the Dodge case.

Two steps took him to the hall, where the day before he had installed a peculiar box about four by six inches, connected in some way with a lens-like box of similar size above our bell and speaking tube in the hallway below it. He opened it, disclosing an oblong plate of ground glass.

"I thought the seismograph arrangement was not quite enough after that spring-gun affair," he remarked. "So I have put in a sort of telescope of my own invention—so that I can see down into the vestibule downstairs. Well—just look who's here!"

"Some new-fangled periscope arrangement, I suppose?" I queried, moving slowly over toward it.

However, one look was enough to interest me. I can express it only in slang. There, framed in the little thing, was a vision of as well a "chicken" as I have ever seen.

I whistled under my breath.

"Um!" I exclaimed shamelessly, "A peach! Who's your friend?"

I had never said a truer word than in my description of her, though I did not know it at the time. She was indeed known as "Gertie the Peach" in the select circle where she belonged.

Kennedy had opened the lower door and our fair visitor was coming upstairs.

"Go in there, Walter," he said, seizing me quickly and pushing me into my room. "I want you to wait there and watch her carefully."

Kennedy opened the door, disclosing a very excited young woman.

"Oh, Professor Kennedy," she cried, all in one breath, with much emotion. "I'm so glad I found you. I can't tell you. Oh—my jewels! They have been stolen—and my husband must not know of it. Help me to recover them—please!"

"Just a moment, my dear young lady," interrupted Craig, finding at last a chance to get a word in edgewise. "Do you see that table—and all those papers? Really, I can't take your case. I am too busy, as it is, even to take the cases of many of my own clients."

"But please, Professor Kennedy—please!" she begged. "Help me. It means—oh I can't tell you how much it means to me!"

She had come close to him and had laid her warm, little soft hand on his, in ardent entreaty.

From my hiding place in my room, I could not help seeing that she was using every charm of her sex and personality to lure him on, as she clung condescendingly to him.

Gertie had thrown her arms about Kennedy, as if in wildest devotion. I wondered what Elaine would have thought if she had a picture of that!

"Oh," she begged him, "please—please help me!"

Still Kennedy seemed utterly unaffected by her passionate embrace. Carefully he loosened her fingers from about his neck and removed the plump, enticing arms.

Gertie sank into a chair, weeping, while Kennedy stood before her a moment in deep abstraction.

Finally he seemed to make up his mind to something. His manner toward her changed. He took a step toward her side.

"I will help you," he said, laying his hand on her shoulder. "If it is possible I will recover your jewels. Where do you live?"

"At Hazlehurst," she replied, gratefully. "Oh, Mr. Kennedy, now can I ever thank you?"

She seemed overcome with gratitude, and took his hand, pressed it, even kissed it.

"Just a minute," he added, carefully extricating his hand. "I'll be ready in just a minute."

Kennedy entered the room where I was listening.

"What's it all about, Craig?" I whispered, mystified.

For a moment he stood thinking, apparently reconsidering what he had just done. Then his second thought seemed to approve it.

"This is a trap of the Clutching Hand, Walter," he whispered, adding tensely, "and we're going to walk right into it."

"But, Craig," I demurred, "that's foolhardy. Have he trailed—anything—but—"

He shook his head, and with a mere motion of his hand brushed aside my objections as he went to a cabinet across the room.

From one shelf he took out a small metal box and from another a test tube, placing the test tube in his waistcoat pocket and the small box in his coat pocket with excessive care.

Then he turned and motioned to me to follow him out into the other room. I did so, stuffing my "gatt" into my pocket.

"Let me introduce my friend, Mr. Jameson," said Craig, presenting me to the pretty crook.

The introduction quickly over, we three went out to get Craig's car, which he kept at a nearby garage.

That forenoon Perry Bennett was reading up a case. In the outer office Milton Schofield, his office boy, was industriously chewing gum and admiring his feet, cocked up on the desk before him.

The door to the waiting room opened and an attractive woman of perhaps thirty, dressed in extreme mourning, entered with a boy.

Milton cast a glance of scorn at the "little dude." He was in reality about fourteen years old, but was dressed to look much younger.

"Did you wish to see Mr. Bennett?" asked the precocious Milton, politely, on one hand, while on the other he made a wry grimace.

"Yes—here is my card," replied the woman.

It was deeply bordered in black. Even Milton was startled at reading it: "Mrs. Taylor Dodge."

He looked at the woman in open-mouthed astonishment. Even he knew that Elaine's mother had been dead for years.

The woman, however, true to her name in the artistic coterie in which she was leader, had sunk into a chair and was sobbing convulsively, as only "Weepy Mary" could.

It was so effective that even Milton was visibly moved. He took the card in, excitedly, to Bennett.

"There's a woman outside—says she is Mrs. Taylor Dodge!" he cried.

If Milton had had an X-ray eye he could have seen her take a cigarette from her handbag and light it nonchalantly the moment he was gone.

As for Bennett, Milton, who was watching him closely, thought he was about to discharge him on the spot for bothering him. He took the card, and his face expressed the most extreme surprise, then anger. He thought a moment.

"Tell that woman to state her business in writing," he thundered curtly at Milton.

As the boy turned to go back to the waiting room, Weepy Mary, hearing him coming, hastily shoved the cigarette into her "son's" hand.

"Mr. Bennett says for you to write out what it is you want to see him about," reported Milton, indicating the table before which she was sitting.

Mary had automatically taken up sobbing with the release of the cigarette. She looked at the table on which were letter paper, pens and ink.

"I may write here?" she asked.

"Surely, ma'am," replied Milton, still very much overwhelmed by her sorrow.

"Weepy Mary" sat there, writing and sobbing.

In the midst of his sympathy, however, Milton sniffed. There was an unmistakable odor of tobacco smoke about the room. He looked sharply at the "son," and discovered the still smoking cigarette.

It was too much for Milton's outraged dignity. Bennett did not allow him that coveted privilege. This upstart could not usurp it.

He reached over and seized the boy by the arm, and swung him around till he faced a sign in the corner on the wall.

"See?" he demanded.

The sign read, courteously:

"No Smoking in This Office—Please."

"Perry Bennett," putting the offensive cigarette defiantly into his mouth.

There was every element of a gaudy mixup, when the outer door of the office suddenly swung open and Elaine Dodge entered.

Gallantry was Milton's middle name, and he sprang forward to hold the door, and then opened Bennett's door, as he ushered in Elaine.

As she passed "Weepy Mary," who was still writing at the table and crying bitterly, Elaine hesitated and looked at her curiously. Even after Milton had opened Bennett's door, she could not resist another glance. Instinctively, Elaine seemed to scent trouble.

Bennett was still studying the black-bordered card when she greeted him.

"Who is that woman?" she asked, still wondering about the identity of the noble outside.

At first he said nothing. But finally, seeing that she had noticed it, he handed Elaine the card, reluctantly.

Elaine read it with a gasp. The look of surprise that crossed her face was terrible.

Before she could say anything, however, Milton had returned with the sheet of paper on which "Weepy Mary" had written and handed it to Bennett.

Bennett read it with uncontrolled astonishment.

"What is it?" demanded Elaine.

He handed it to her, and she read: "As the lawful wife and widow of Taylor Dodge I demand my son's rights and my own."

MRS. TAYLOR DODGE.

Elaine gasped at it.

"She—my father's wife!" she exclaimed. "What effrontery! What does she mean?"

Bennett hesitated. "Is there—can there be anything in it? No—no—there isn't."

Bennett spoke in a low tone. "I have heard a whisper of some scandal or other connected with your father—but—" He paused.

Elaine was first shocked, then indignant.

"Why—such a thing is absurd. Show the woman in!"

"No—please—Miss Dodge. Let me deal with her."

By this time Elaine was furious.

"Yes—I will see her."

She pressed the button on Bennett's desk, and Milton responded.

"Milton, show the woman in," she ordered, "and that boy, too."

As Milton turned to crook his finger at "Weepy Mary," she nodded surreptitiously and dug her fingers sharply into "son's" ribs.

"Yell—you little fool—yell," she whispered.

Obedient to his "mother's" commands, and much to Milton's disgust, the boy started to cry in close imitation of his elder.

Elaine was still holding the paper in her hands when they entered.

"What does all this mean?" she demanded.

"Weepy Mary," between sobs, managed to blurt out, "You are Miss Elaine Dodge, aren't you? Well, it means that your father married me when I was only seventeen and this boy is our son—your half-brother."

"No—never," cried Elaine vehemently, unable to restrain her disgust.

"Weepy Mary" smiled cynically. "Come with me and I will show you the church records and the minister who married us."

"You will?" repeated Elaine defiantly. "Well, I'll just do as you ask. Mr. Bennett shall go with me."

"No, no, Miss Dodge—don't go. Leave the matter to me," urged Bennett. "I will take care of her. Besides, I must be in court in twenty minutes."

Elaine paused, but she was thoroughly aroused.

"Then I will go with my myself," she cried defiantly.

In spite of every objection that Bennett made, "Weepy Mary," her son and Elaine went out to call a taxicab to take them to the railroad station where they could catch a train to the little town where the woman asserted she had been married.

Meanwhile, before a little country church in the town, a closed automobile had drawn up.

As the door opened a figure, humped up and masked, alighted.

It was the Clutching Hand. The car had scarcely pulled away when he gave a long rap, followed by two short taps, at the door of the vestry, a secret code, evidently.

Inside the vestry room a man well dressed, but with a very sinister face, heard the knock and a second later opened the door.

"What—not ready yet?" growled the Clutching Hand. "Quick—now—get on those clothes. I heard the train whistle as I came in the car. In which closet does the minister keep them?"

The crook, without a word, went to a closet and took out a suit of clothes of ministerial cut. Then he hastily put them on, adding some side-whiskers which he had brought with him.

At about the same time Elaine, accompanied by "Weepy Mary" and her son, had arrived at the little tumble-down station and had taken the only vehicle in sight, a very ancient carriage.

It ambled along until, at last, it pulled up before the vestry room door of the church, just as the bogus minister was finishing his transformation from a frank crook. Clutching Hand was giving him his final instructions.

Elaine and the others alighted and approached the church, while the ancient vehicle rattled away.

"They're coming!" whispered the crook, peering cautiously out of the window.

Clutching Hand moved silently and snake-like into the closet and shut the door.

"How do you do, Doctor Carlton?" greeted "Weepy Mary." "I guess you don't remember me."

The clerical gentleman looked at her fixedly a moment.

"Remember you?" he repeated. "Of course, my dear. I remember everyone I marry."

"And you remember to whom you married me?"

"Perfectly. To an older man—a Taylor Dodge."

Elaine was overcome.

"Won't you step in?" he said suavely. "Your friend here doesn't seem well."

They all entered.

"And you—say—you married this—this woman to Taylor Dodge?" queried Elaine, tensely.

The bogus minister seemed to be very fatherly. "Yes," he asserted, "I certainly did so."

"Have you the record?" asked Elaine, fighting to the last.

"Why, yes. I can show you the record."

He moved over to the closet. "Come over here," he asked.

He opened the door, Elaine screamed and drew back. There stood her arch enemy, the Clutching Hand himself.

As he stepped forth, she turned wildly, to run—anywhere. But strong arms seized her and forced her into a chair.

She looked at the woman and the minister. It was a plot!

"A moment Clutching Hand looked Elaine over. 'Put the others out,' he ordered the other crook.

"Now, my pretty dear," began the Clutching Hand as the lock turned in the vestry door, "we shall be joined toward him, he waited, cold sweat breaking out on his face.

"Say," he whined, "you let me be!"

It was ineffectual. Kennedy, smiling confidently, came closer, still holding the deadly little box, balanced between two fingers.

He took the crook's gun and dropped it into his pocket.

"Sit down!" ordered Craig.

Outside, the other six parleyed in hoarse whispers. One raised a gun, but the woman and the others restrained him and fled.

"Take me to your master!" demanded Kennedy.

The crook remained silent.

"Where is he?" repeated Craig. "Tell me!"

Still the man remained silent. Craig looked the fellow over again. Then, still with that confident smile, he reached into his inside pocket and drew forth the tube I had seen him place there.

"No matter how much you accuse me," added Craig casually, "no one will ever take the word of a crook that a reputable scientist like me would do what I am about to do."

He had taken out his penknife and opened it. Then he beckoned to me.

"Bare his arm and hold his wrist, Walter," he said.

Craig bent down with the knife and the tube, then paused a moment and turned to tube so that we could see it.

On the label were the ominous words:

Germ Culture 6248A

Bacillus Leprae (Leprosy)

Calmly he took the knife and proceeded to make an incision in the man's arm. The crook's feelings underwent a terrific struggle.

"No—no—no—don't," he implored. "I will take you to the Clutching Hand—even if he kills me!"

Kennedy stepped back, replacing the tube in his pocket.

"Very well, go ahead!" he agreed. We followed the crook, Craig still holding the deadly box of fulminate of mercury carefully balanced so that if anyone shot him from a hiding place it would drop.

No sooner had we gone than Gertie hurried to the nearest telephone to inform the Clutching Hand of our escape.

Elaine had sunk back into the chair as the telephone rang. Clutching Hand answered it.

A moment later, in uncontrollable fury he hurled the instrument to the floor.

"Here—we've got to act quickly—that devil has escaped again," he hissed. "We must get her away. You keep her here. I'll be back—right away—with a car."

He dashed madly from the church, pulling off his mask as he gained the street.

Kennedy had forced the crook ahead of us into the car which was waiting, and I followed, taking the wheel this time.

"Which way, now—quick!" demanded Craig. "And if you get me in wrong—I've got that tube yet—you remember."

Our crook started off with a whole burst of directions that rivaled the motor guide—"through the town, following trolley tracks, jog right, jog left under the railroad bridge, leaving trolley tracks; at the cemetery turn left, stopping at the old stone church."

"Is this it?" asked Craig incredulously.

"Yes—as I live," swore the crook in a cowed voice.

He had gone to pieces. Kennedy jumped from the machine.

"Here, take this gun, Walter," he said to me. "Don't take your eyes off the fellow—keep him covered."

Craig walked around the church, out of sight, until he came to a small vestry window and looked in.

There was Elaine, sitting in a chair, and near her stood an elderly-looking man in clerical garb, which to Craig's trained eye was quite evidently a disguise.

Elaine happened just then to glance at the window and her eyes grew wide with astonishment at the sight of Craig.

He made a hasty motion to her to make a dash for the door. She nodded quietly.

With a glance at her guardian she suddenly made a rush.

He was at her in a moment, pouncing on her, catlike.

Kennedy had seized an iron bar that lay beside the window where some workmen had been repairing the stone pavement, and with a blow shattered the glass and the sash.

At the sound of the smashing glass the crook turned and with a mighty effort threw Elaine aside, drawing his revolver. As he raised it, Elaine sprang at him and frantically seized his wrist.

Utterly merciless the man brought the butt of the gun down with full force on Elaine's head. Only her hat and hair saved her, but she sank unconscious.

Then he turned at Craig and fired twice.

One shot grazed Craig's hat, but the other struck him in the shoulder and Kennedy reeled.

With a desperate effort he pulled himself toward her and leaped forward again, closing with the fellow and wrenching the gun from him before he could fire again.

Just then the man broke away and made a dash for the door leading back into the church itself, with Kennedy after him.

Up he went into the choir loft and then into the belfry itself. There they came to sheer hand-to-hand struggle. Kennedy tripped on a loose board, and would have fallen backwards if he had not been able to recover himself just in time. The crook, desperate, leaped for the ladder leading farther up into the steeple.

Kennedy followed.

Elaine had recovered consciousness almost immediately, and, hearing the commotion, stirred and started to rise and look about.

From the church she could hear sounds of the struggle. She paused just long enough to seize the crook's revolver lying on the floor.

She hurried into the church and up into the belfry, thence up the ladder, whence the sounds came.

The crook by this time had gained the outside of the steeple through an opening. Kennedy was in close pursuit.

On the top of the steeple was a great gilded cross, considerably larger than a man. As the crook clambered outside, he scaled the steeple, using a lightning rod and some projecting points to pull himself up, desperately.

Kennedy followed unhesitatingly.

There they were, struggling in deadly combat, clinging to the gilded cross.

The first I knew of it was a horrified gasp from my own crook. I looked up carefully, fearing it was a stall to get me off my guard.

Just Then I Saw a Woman's Face Tense With Horror; It Was Elaine.

There were Kennedy and the other crook, struggling, swaying back and forth, between life and death.

There was nothing I could do. Kennedy was clinging to a lightning rod on the cross.

I broke.

I gasped as Craig reeled back. But he managed to catch hold of the rod farther down and cling to it.

DEATH OF MR. SKELTON

Residents of Newtonville were greatly shocked by the sad death of Mr. Charles B. Skelton, which occurred Sunday at the Newton Hospital. Mr. Skelton, who had charge of the Clafin Estate, was down at the shore, and was called home Friday to look after the old Clafin house on Elm road, as many of the inmates were away for the summer and those who remained were nervous about occupying the old Colonial mansion alone. As Mr. Skelton ascended the old-fashioned staircase, he fell over the balustrade in some unaccountable manner. The sound of the heavy fall aroused the inmates, who found him lying unconscious on the floor of the hall below.

The neighbors were aroused and medical assistance summoned and the injured man was removed to the hospital, where he never regained consciousness.

Mr. Skelton was born in London, Eng., and came to America in 1903, and was sixty years of age. He was a member of the firm of C. Skelton and Sons, dealers in bicycles and hardware, with stores in Newton and Newton Centre.

He is survived by a widow, four sons, Mr. John C. Skelton of Newton Centre, Mr. Herbert F. Skelton, Mr. Daniel Skelton and Mr. William Skelton of Newtonville, and four daughters, Mrs. A. Williams of London, Eng., Mrs. Charles Fish of Waltham, Mrs. Silas A. Seeley and Miss Celia S. Skelton of Newtonville.

The funeral was held Wednesday afternoon at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Silas Seeley on Walnut terrace, Newtonville.

Services were conducted at 2.30 by Rev. Richard T. Loring, rector of St. John's Church. The pallbearers were Mr. Charles Fish of Waltham, Mr. William Hollis of Upper Falls, Mr. Harry Skelton of Needham, Mr. Frederic W. Woolway of Newton Centre, Mr. Charles Carter of West Newton and Mr. James Johnson of Newtonville.

There were many beautiful floral tributes and the burial was in the Newton Cemetery.

PLAY GOOD BALL

The girls' baseball team of the Rindge Playground, Cambridge, claimants of the State championship, were defeated by the Lower Falls Playground girls Tuesday afternoon in a game watched by a large and enthusiastic crowd at the Newton Centre Playground. The score was 13 to 1, and in every department of the game the local girls outclassed their opponents.

When the game came to a close, after five innings of fast playing, Ex-Alderman Thomas J. Lyons, a member of the Playground Commission, who officiated as umpire, presented Miss Catherine McLoughlin, the successful pitcher of the Lower Falls team, with the baseball Walter Johnson used in his game against the Red Sox last Saturday, and bearing the signature of John Henry, the backstop of the Washington Senators.

Only one hit was made off Miss McLoughlin, that being a three-bagger by Lillian Daly, the opposing catcher, who scored the only run for Cambridge. Miss McLoughlin's record in the box was 11 strikeouts, a free pass to first and one batter hit. Dorothy Cobb, the Cambridge twirler, was found for 13 hits. She struck out three and hit one batter.

The Lower Falls girls claimed the State title on winning the game and are prepared to defend it against all comers. This afternoon on the Upper Falls Playground the Lower Falls girls will play the Upper Falls girls for the championship of the South Side division of the Playground League.

TREMONT THEATRE—So strong is the demand for seats for "The Birth of a Nation," the big Griffith spectacle now in its nineteenth week at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, that its engagement has been extended to Saturday, Sept. 4. The original plan was to close next Saturday night but the announcement brought such an avalanche of seat orders that it became apparent at once that many would be disappointed. It was then arranged to remain at the Tremont—Boston's coolest theatre—until the Saturday before Labor Day, when the spectacle will give way to another attraction. Unauthorized announcements have been made as to the probability of "The Birth of a Nation," with its 18,000 people, 3,000 horses and countless other wonders being exhibited in the smaller New England towns but it should be borne in mind that only in a very large, thoroughly equipped theatre like the Tremont can a spectacle of this calibre be adequately presented. The symphony orchestra of forty pieces and the great force of super-numeraries and mechanics who have been employed in the Tremont Theatre production would almost fill the orchestra floor of the ordinary playhouse. Daily matinees are given at 2.10 and the evening performances begin at 8.10. The scale of prices is: Nights 25c to $2.00; matinees, 25c to $1. Tickets will be mailed to patrons sending cash with their orders or will be held for them in the box office.

RU-BER-OID
SHINGLES
COST MORE - WEAR LONGER

We know that you can depend upon them to remain watertight and good looking year after year without attention. The attractive colors of RU-BER-OID SHINGLES are permanently built into them. They come in beautiful Tile Red and Slate Gray.

RU-BER-OID SHINGLES cannot warp, break or rot. They are made by the manufacturers of RU-BER-OID Roofing, the original, pliable ready-to-lay roofing, which has given more than twenty years of constant service without repairs. If you want a roof that will be both attractive and permanent, come in and look at these good shingles and let us give you our prices.

FUNERAL OF MRS. VOSE

Funeral services were held for Mrs. William Tilston Vose on Sunday afternoon at 3.30, at her late residence on Lowell avenue, Newtonville.

Rev. Richard T. Loring, rector of St. John's Church, officiated at the first part of the service. Mr. Frederick N. Barbour, a very dear friend of the family, read an appropriate poem, and Mr. Robert Burns, a devoted friend of the deceased, recited the 23rd Psalm.

Dr. G. F. Wiksell, an old family friend, conducted the service at the grave.

The acting pall bearers were Messrs. Edwin H. Cram, Charles N. Sladen, Frederick N. Barbour, Dr. Gustave P. Wiksell, Mr. Robert Burns and Mr. Josiah Edward Lincoln.

The floral tributes were many and very beautiful, and the burial was in the family lot in the Newton Cemetery. Mr. and Mrs. Vose were among those present when the Newton Cemetery was consecrated, and Mr. Vose was the second lot purchaser.

Mrs. Vose is survived by her sister, Mrs. John De Huff, of Pasadena, California, who will be 90 years old in January; and by a cousin Mr. Josiah E. Lincoln of Putnam street, West Newton.

POLICE NOTES

The local police were given somewhat of a scare for a few minutes Wednesday night, when Solon Erskell, a colored chauffeur, informed patrolman C. B. Carrigan that he had been held up and robbed of $37 and a gold watch on Centre street, near Mt. Ida street, shortly after midnight.

Later patrolman Charles Tainter, who doubted the story of the young man, found out from Erskell himself that the latter had been in a poker game and had lost his money and watch in that way. In the meantime a detail of men had been rushed to the scene of the alleged holdup and the ground thoroughly gone over, and headquarters had notified the surrounding cities and towns.

Lieut. Soule had a long talk with the young man, and says Erskell admitted to him that the story told patrolman Tainter was true; also that the money belonged to his employer and that he wanted some excuse to give after losing it.

REAL ESTATE

The mercantile property situated at the corner of Langley road and Union street, Newton Centre, has been sold by Samuel J. Wilde to The Newton Building Trust. The new owners will immediately rebuild this structure decidedly changing as well as improving its exterior appearance, and completely remodeling the interior, at an additional cost of $25,000. After the alterations are completed, the building will contain eight handsome stores and ten five room apartments, with all modern conveniences.

In conjunction with this sale The Newton Building Trust have also purchased the Cousens lot, situated on Union street and adjoining the first mentioned piece, containing 9263 sq. ft. of land. This valuable parcel will also be developed in a high class manner, in the near future. Both of the above sales were made through the office of Henry W. Savage, Inc., 129 Tremont street, Boston.

DEATH OF MR. WILLIAMS

Mr. Edgar E. Williams, a resident of Newtonville for the past seventeen years, died on Sunday at his home on Madison avenue after an illness of many months with cancer of the stomach. Mr. Williams was born in East Paris, Me., and was 67 years of age. He is survived by one daughter, Miss Mabel V. Williams of Newtonville.

Mr. Williams was custodian of the Masonic Hall property in Newtonville and a member and officer in all the Masonic bodies in this city including, Dalhousie and Fraternity lodges, Newton Royal Arch Chapter, Getsemane Commandery, K. T., Cryptic Council, Palestine Chapter, O. E. S., and of Omar Grotto. He was also a member of Mt. Ida Council, R. A.

Funeral services were held in Pre-late Hall, Masonic Temple, on Tuesday afternoon. Rev. R. T. Loring of St. John's Church officiated and there was a large attendance of friends. The active pall bearers were A. D. Cady, Wm. Dalhousie Lodge; William S. Osborne, Wm. Fraternity Lodge; A. H. Decatur, Commander Getsemane Commandery, K. T.; Charles J. Fogg, Tm. Cryptic Council; Hon. Charles E. Hatfield and A. Sidney Bryant. The honorary pall bearers were Messrs. Frank L. Nagle, Arthur G. Hosmer, Edward C. Wyatt, Asa C. Jewett, W. G. Wilkins, Hon. Edwin O. Childs, Col. G. H. Benyon, Dr. J. J. Coxeter and Wm. H. Colgan.

The interment was at North Dana, Mass., on Wednesday.

Old books which are too dilapidated for binding or general use were formerly burned, but the library has recently contributed them to hospitals, lighthouses, southern schools, seamen's homes and vessels, the contagious wards of the Newton hospital, and has even caused them to be sent to far away Alaska. Books are of course rebound and mended wherever possible and used as long as decency will allow. Papers from the reading room are sold for old paper and the magazines are bound and placed on the library shelves for circulation.

The library maintains reading and reference rooms and branches at West Newton, Auburndale, Newton Centre, Upper Falls, Nonantum, Newtonville, Newton Highlands, Thompsonville, and Waban, each in charge of one assistant. That at West Newton is the oldest and was formerly the property of the Newton Newton Atheneum. Eight of these branches are open daily except Sundays and holidays for seven hours, although those at Upper Falls and Waban are open but five hours.

The branch libraries are supplied at frequent intervals with deposits of books, so that residents of other villages can have books within their reach as well as the card service from the main library. About 1400 books are kept at the Newton Centre branch and some 9,000 books at all the branches.

An agency where books can be left and called for, is maintained at Lower Falls. Books are exchanged daily with the branches and agencies at Newtonville, West Newton, Auburndale, Newton Centre, Newton Highlands and Upper Falls; tri-weekly with Lower Falls and Waban, twice a week with Nonantum and once a week with Thompsonville.

Fines of two cents a day are imposed for retaining books beyond the limit fixed on the cover, and have a salutary effect. The receipts from this source and from the sale of catalogues and bulletins are turned over to the City Treasurer about $1200 annually.

The main library and reading rooms are open daily except Sundays and holidays from 8 a. m. to 9 p. m., and the reading rooms are open on Sunday afternoon from six to eight o'clock.

An admirable feature of the library is the Young People's room. Pictures are displayed frequently, when some anniversary of historic importance arrives or some current event can be illustrated.

The demand for the latest fiction reached such proportions some years ago that the trustees inaugurated a duplicate policy, and a number of extra copies of the latest fiction were purchased and circulated at the rate of two cents a day. The receipts amount to about $1500, and are also turned over to the City Treasurer monthly.

Persons who do not care to wait their turn for the regular library copies, can usually obtain the book from the duplicate pay collection, and do not mind the small fee if it entitles them to the book at once. The library receives the income of several funds, donated by its friends. The late John S. Farlow gave $5,000, the income to be used for the purchase of books for the reference library. The income of the Jewett Art Fund of $10,000 is used to purchase photographs, music and art. The several hundred dollars each year from the Reed Fund provide new books of a general character, and the income of the $1,000 of the Alden Spear Fund is used for books on manufacturing and mechanical trades. Mr. John C. Chaffin left $5000, the income to be expended for books of an instructive and elevating character.

In conclusion it should be said frankly that Newton ought to be proud of its library. It stands as a monument to the public spirit of those gentlemen of a past generation, who were far sighted enough to provide for all time to come for the dissemination of literature to all who desire to avail themselves of its stores of knowledge.

WILBUR THEATRE—The social event of the year will be the opening of the Wilbur Theatre, Monday evening, August 23rd, with the musical comedy success "Nobody Home," which will be presented by F. Ray Comstock and Elisabeth Marbury, direct from a run of six months in New York, with the original New York cast headed by that inimitable English comedian, Lawrence Grossmith, capably assisted by Adele Rowland, Maude Odell, Laura Hamilton, Helen Clarke, Charles Judels, George Lydecker, Nigel Barrie, Quentin Tod, Tom Graves, Carl Lyle, Frank Ross, Lester Greenwood, Byrd Coombs, Lillian Tucker, Gertrude Valxell, Mona Santoris, Winifred Brown, Marion Davis, Louise White, Ethel Clayton and Elizabeth Moore. "Nobody Home" is best described as a wealth of delightful, synoptic music, with a dash of pretty girls, the very newest thing in modern dancing and a cast of artists. One of the principal features of the production is the dancing done by Quentin Tod and Helen Clarke, the latest find of Elisabeth Marbury, who for several years managed and was responsible for the success of Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Castle. Mr. Tod and Miss Clarke have three feature dances—a dainty military dance, which is the reigning fad in New York at the present time, a new one-step and a cake-walk. The music of "Nobody Home" scarcely needs an introduction as its fame and melodic powers have traveled long in advance of the production. There are at least twenty popular, catchy tunes among which are "Bed, Wonderful Bed," "Why take a sandwich to a Banquet," "Any Old Night is the Right Sort of Night, if you're there with the Right Sort of Girl," "A Trip to the San Francisco Fair," "The Charlie Chaplin Walk" and "You Know and I Know, so what do we Care." Miss Anne Morgan, daughter of the late J. Pierpont Morgan, has purchased a box for the opening performance. Governor Walsh and Mayor Curley will occupy boxes, and all the smart set from the North Shore and Newport will be on hand Monday evening, August 23rd.

THE PLAGUE OF MOSQUITOES

There is a measure of truth in the excuse that the persistent wetness of the weather has caused the extraordinary multiplicity of mosquitoes, plaguing all the boroughs and the country round about with this pest.

But it is also true that the expenditure of a minimum of money and effort on the part of the City in the work of mosquito extermination was the contributory negligence that exposed the people to this visitation and facilitated the recruiting of the numberless armies of comfort destroyers.

It is also true that this negligence has been cumulative, extending back several years and undoing to a large extent the thorough and effective mosquito extermination work that was done by Dr. Doty.

It is certain, therefore, that the unparalleled leanness of the clouds is not wholly responsible for the torments that the people of Staten Island have suffered this summer. Equal guilt attaches to the City Administration.

This is not wholly hindsight. This condition was foreseen by President Willcox, of the Civic League, when he urged the Board of Estimate a year ago not to let up in the work of mosquito extermination. It was foreseen last Spring by Secretary Nash when he went post haste after the mosquito fleet, when it went over to Queens, and brought back half of it.

But the public generally was easy going and shortsighted economy was allowed to prevail. Now the public, here and in the other boroughs is being stung "good and plenty."—The Richmond County (N. Y.) Advance.

SHUBERT THEATRE—"Experience"

the famous modern morality drama by George V. Hobart, with the record of a nine months' run in New York last season, comes to the Shubert Theatre, Boston, Saturday night, August 28th, for a limited engagement, under the joint direction of William Elliott, F. Ray Comstock and Morris West. The play is in ten scenes, and is acted by a company of 82 players. It is a big, gorgeous, glittering and thrilling drama of life, showing in these ten widely-contrasting scenes the different experiences and temptations which confront youth when he goes forth into the world in search of Fame and Fortune. "Experience" will be given a private performance Friday night, August 27th, before a specially invited audience of ministers, only. No tickets will be placed on sale for this private performance. The first public performance will be Saturday night, and thereafter "Experience" will be presented every night, and at the Wednesday and Saturday matinees. A special scale of prices will prevail at the Shubert for "Experience." The entire lower floor will be $1.50, except at the Wednesday matinee, when $1 will be the top price. These prices have never before been charged at the Shubert.

NORUMBEGA PARK

Double attractions are offered to patrons of Norumbega's famous open air theatre this week. Every matinee an excellent vaudeville program is presented. Heading the bill in an eccentric, dramatic act is Robinson and L. and favor and judging from the enthusiastic applause accorded them is meeting much success. Frank and Kittle Hogan offered some bits of vaudeville that were very funny. Col. Jack George, famous monologist, entertained with stories. The Mosher in a big sensational bicycle act were extremely good. Every evening this week the great dramatic play "Scandal" is presented. Sunday night the charming actress Mary Pickford, will be presented in the pretty photo play, Cinderella. Next week the greatest of all musical comedies is booked to appear here under the elusive title "Other People's Money". Including an excellent cast with a chorus of the sweet sixteen type, some big song and dance numbers, this promises to be of great success. The host of attractions found at Norumbega makes it New England's amusement center.

Y. M. C. A.

The local Y. M. C. A. team has been very much weakened the past three weeks on account of the absence of Hines and Ely both infielders. With 13 hits to their credit against 8 for opponents they lost the game last Saturday.

They were to meet the strong Gamewell team next Saturday on the Association grounds but the Gamewell team has cancelled the game. The Norwood Civic Association has been secured to fill in the date.

An effort will be made to arrange games with the local teams during the remainder of the season. Forty boys under the supervision of Physical Director Macpherson and Francis Caverly were guests of the Red Sox management last week. All the boys are rooting hard for a world series in Boston to take place in Fenway Park.

A water carnival will be conducted in the pool next Friday at 3.30 open to members of the Junior Dept. There will be swimming, diving and tub racing.

development is all in the material direction; ours very much in the sincerely spiritual. That is why our people should take sides, to prevent the highest elements of Europe from being crushed by numbers to the profit of a very low state of civilization: we don't want a plethora of harmful material prosperity; we do want enough, but we require something to live for, and material comfort at the cost of slavery to people who do not deserve universal submission, cannot, at any price be accepted by us.

I am sending you a paper—the editorial will give you a hint of our opinion.—Tribune de Genista 27th July. As to the atrocities, they are true. I have asked our Brother E. Pike of Manchester (26 Wing St.) to send you copies of the Report of the Committee on Alleged German Outrages, the English government's publication. I hope he will do so. Read and decide for yourself. We have here people who are refugees from France and Belgium. They relate the most abominable things, many of which are proved. Bro. Pike is 72-73 years of age. Putting aside all hatred feeling of which I believe myself to be incapable, at least as an absolute feeling, I believe the only way to save the German people is to crush it absolutely in this war. Its victory would be the triumph of barbarity and injustice, the dishonor of Germany, and a most frightful state of despotism and brutality for everything not German. No, death is better than that—worse than death is better than German victory. I do not believe that Germany will win, and whatever the seasaws, it shall not win. If America wishes sincerely for peace, it must help on the side of freedom, of course, there are two currents of opinion in your country, as in ours, and the majority here of German-Swiss are still hypnotized by the late German prosperity; but we found hopes on the victory of conquest over interest, because, should Germany get a momentary supremacy, there are too many determined soldiers of real liberty for the fight not to crop up again, worse than now, for years and years and at every possible opportunity.

This abominable attempt is to be stopped now and for ever, at any cost. Peace is an empty word so long as military aristocracies have any power, and are all being heavily burdened, many ruined, but we don't want peace with a thunderclap in front.

Now this Masonic office for research of lost persons idea, accepted by our Grand Lodge which started it in Lausanne and Geneva, proceeds in this wise: an enquiry received is examined: the locality where the lost one was last seen is sought over on the map. The nearest lodge is then asked to search for the missing person (no distinction of rank, sex, religious or political opinions is made) and we hope that members of the lodge having relations or interests of many kinds in the district may be happier as to results, than the Red Cross which can only consult the official lists of prisoners or wounded. That is all. May we be of some use!

Well I cannot type my letter as I have lent my machine, but you will be able to read this.

HOW NEWTON IS GOVERNED

Seventh of a Series of Articles Explaining the Management of the City

The fire department has a fascination for every citizen from the youth school to the gray haired veteran. Like to see the apparatus tearing through the streets, to watch it at work extinguishing the flames and to see people pass the fire stations halting step, hoping to obtain glimpse of the hitching-up process. In this city, the fire department is efficiently managed and its mod-demands in the annual budget are carefully granted by succeeding boards of aldermen. It is run without parent friction, does its work well, it is in a state of high discipline at times.

This result is primarily due to the personality of its chief, Walter B. Aldett, who has been 26 years in the vice, as assistant chief and chief, whose reputation as a fire fighter is not confined to the limits of the City of Newton.

The department consists of a Chief, Assistant Chief, three Captains, five Lieutenants, 45 permanent and Call Officers and Men.

The Apparatus in service includes team Fire Engines, Horse drawn, 1 for Pumping Engine, 2 Automobiles, 1 for Trucks with Tractors, 5 for Combination Hose and Chemical, 2 Horse Hose Wagons.

The department has in reserve 1 am Fire Engine, 2 Chemical Engines and 3 Horse Wagons. Nine stables are maintained and 12 horses are in the work.

The permanent men are on duty for four hours each day, with one hour allowed for meals and are provided with lodgings at the various stations. Fourteen days' vacation are granted annually and one day's leave is granted in every eight days. This leave of absence requires the service of relief men who rotate from station to station as the leave is granted.

The engineers, where steamers are used, have general charge of the stoves, and its heating apparatus and everything in condition for immediate use. The drivers take care of the horses, stables and harnesses, exercise the horses daily. In stations where there are no steamers, the drivers also have charge of the house, the call men are divided into companies, each in charge of a foreman, and are assigned to each hose company, nine to each truck and seven to an engine. They answer every call in the district to which they are assigned under penalty of one dollar for each neglect.

All firemen are appointed by the board, subject to approval of the mayor. The permanent men are usually selected from the call force, and are more substitutes are always provided for the call force. Appointments are always probationary and are not confirmed for at least six months.

The fire alarm telegraph system is indispensable to the efficiency of the department. 170 boxes, most of which are keyless are scattered about the city at points approved by the chief, and are divided into ten different electrical circuits. Each circuit has its own complement of boxes, bells and gongs, and is connected through an instrument at headquarters called the repeater, with every other circuit in the city.

A brief description of what happens when there is a fire may be of interest. In ringing an alarm the key to the nearest box is obtained from some nearby responsible citizen (or if the Box is a Key Box, break the glass, open the door) the box opened and the hook found inside is pulled down. This starts a mechanical clock movement, operated by a spring, and revolves a circuit wheel, cut with teeth, corresponding to the number of the box. The movement of these teeth, makes and breaks the electrical circuit, and the necessary impetus given the mechanism operating the strikers to the bells and gongs on the circuit. Through the repeater at headquarters the remaining circuits are then set in motion and the alarm sounded throughout the city. The bell strikers are operated mechanically and will strike from 50 to 350 blows without rewinding, depending on the length of the drop for the weight.

In passing through fire alarm headquarters at Newton Centre, the alarm is in motion the apparatus controlling the pen register and time stamp. The time is stamped on an endless paper tape, and the pen registers the blows, the time being again stamped when the alarm ceases.

The alarm is sounded in each station, the gas is lighted and the stall doors opened automatically, thereby releasing the horses, which are trained to go immediately to their places. The swinging harness is clasped to them with a few rapid movements, and the driver is often in his seat ready to start before the first round of the box is completed. Ten seconds is the record for a two horse hitch in Newton and 15 seconds for a three horse hitch. The doors of the station can be opened by the driver from his seat and as soon as the box is located a start is made.

The house is left in the care of the police officer on that beat, the gas being automatically extinguished in three minutes. The first fireman arriving at a fire has command until a superior officer arrives. On reaching the configuration the driver of the hose wagon runs a line of hose from the engine immediately connects with the hydrant and hose. The chemical engines drive as near as possible and

Enjoyable Affair for the Benefit of Stearns School Playground

The Field Day held last Saturday afternoon and evening at the Stearns School playground netted about $150 and furnished a large amount of pleasure to many persons.

The program of the afternoon included numerous kinds of sports under the direction of Messrs. William Dorney and Hugh Boyd, the winners being as follows:

High Shoe Race—Won by Raymond Titcher; Charles Connors, second; Edward Foley, third.

Low Shoe Race—Won by Louise Morrell; George White, second; Clarence Muse, third.

Obstacle Race—Won by Joseph Charlton; Joseph Masse, second; John Drew, third.

Three-Legged Race—Won by Joseph Charlton and John Drew; Frank Daly and John Farrell, second; Cameron Rae and Jack Varley, third.

Sack Race—Won by Charles Connors; Joseph Charlton, second; William Quinlan, third.

Ball-Throwing Contest—Won by Marian Blakeney; Louise Delaney, second; Margaret Considine, third.

Junior 50-Yard Dash—Won by Eva Masse; Genevieve Boughan, second; Louise Morrell, third.

Senior 50-Yard Dash—Won by Louise Leonard; Anna Coughlin, second; Rose Swartz, third.

There were also demonstrations of folk dancing by girls in costume, including the Irish Lilt, dainty step and Dutch dance.

In the evening the principal interest centered in a vaudeville show given by the Stearns seniors with sketches by Edward Terrio, and John McNamara, George Bradley, Hugh Boyd and James Crowdie, selections by a quartet composed of George Bradley, John McNamara, Thomas Walworth and Hugh Boyd and recitations by Miss Myrtle Weldon and John Blakeney.

Mayor Childs made an address on the benefit derived from the playground work.

Other interesting features were automobile rides, dancing on the lawn, a novelty table under the charge of the Misses May Fisher, Myrtle Weldon, Ruth Boyd, Donald Masse, Anna Masse, Alice Livingston, Stella Landry, Helen Bondrot and Clara Delorey. The refreshment table, under the direction of Mrs. John W. Murphy, Mrs. Annie Bradley, Mrs. Della Hannon, Mrs. George J. Hannon, Mrs. Thomas F. Delaney, Miss Mary Rooney and Miss Mary Blakeney did a flourishing business throughout the day.

The affair was the outcome of suggestions made a few weeks ago by Miss Mildred Hickey and Miss Agnes J. Gavin, the playground directors.

BOY DROWNED

Newton Lad Loses Life in the Charles River

Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Gilmore of Woodward street, Waban, have the deepest sympathy of their friends in the accidental drowning on Monday of their nine year old son, Charles Ernest Gilmore. The lad, was bathing in the Charles River, not far from his home, and was the victim of the heavy rain which had swollen the river at this place where the boys of the neighborhood were accustomed to bathe, to a dangerous point.

The boy was alone at the time, but two smaller boys walking along Quinobquin road saw his struggles and ran for help. They told a woman in the neighborhood who notified the Newton police by telephone. They, in turn, sent word to the Metropolitan Park Police. There are rapids and dams between the park police station and the scene of the drowning so the officers could not make use of their regular boats. By the time they got to work two hours had elapsed, and when the body was recovered the work of two doctors was unavailing. Mr. Gilmore collapsed when he identified the body of his son. The father is one of the best known members of the automobile trade in Boston and a former president of the Bay State Automobile Association.

Funeral services were held from the Gilmore home on Wednesday afternoon, in charge of Rev. Charles Harwood, pastor of the Church of the New Jerusalem at Philadelphia. The pall bearers were Messrs. Louis W. Parent of Waban, Arthur P. Teele of Waltham and Francis P. Allen and George Crittendon of Boston. The burial was in the Newton Cemetery.

OPEN AIR MEETING

Mr. Harry A. Maxwell, general secretary of the Malden Young Men's Christian Association, will be the speaker at the Open Air Meeting, held on the Y. M. C. A. lawn Sunday afternoon at five o'clock, August 29th. Dr. Van Dyne will lead the singing and Mr. Paul Neal of Waltham will sing.

A man is never so poor that he isn't able to find some woman who is willing to share his poverty.

TRAFFIC CENSUS

Mass. Highway Commission Studying Traffic Conditions in Newton

The Massachusetts Highway Commission is making another traffic census of the state, and in this city has arranged with Street Commissioner Stuart to station men at the junction of Washington and Centre street, No-nantum square, at the junction of Washington and Walnut streets, Newtonville, and at the corner of Washington street and Commonwealth avenue, Auburndale.

The count began last Monday morning at 7 A. M. and will continue day and night until that hour next Monday morning.

The census is taken at this time as it is about the height of the motor traffic. Another census will be taken in October, when the traffic is about normal and an average will then be made.

This census has been previously taken in 1912 and 1909. It will be interesting to note the division this year between motor and animal drawn vehicles. In 1912 the motor drawn traffic was 63% of the total.

WINS CHAMPIONSHIP

A large number of friends gathered at the Newton Centre playground Wednesday afternoon to witness the base ball match between the girls of the Upper Falls Playground and those from the Stearns Playground. Each team having won the championship of their own side of the city. Newton Upper Falls won by a score of 14 to 8, played in the regulation five innings. Stearns Playground outthit their opponents and their pitcher, Margaret Considine, struck out 12, while the Upper Falls pitcher, Miss Nina Porter, struck out 10.

The lineup of the Upper Falls team was: Doyle, 1b; Lynch, c; Moran, 3b; Condon, ss; Richards, 2b; Porter, p; Drake, lf; Crowley, rf; Kerrivan, cf. Stearns had these players: Gilligan, 1b; L. Swartz, c; Leonard, ss; Considine, 1b; G. S. Swartz, 3b; Coughlin, cf; Perry, lf; Morrell, rf.

Upper Falls won the right to play for this championship by defeating the girls of Lower Falls last Friday afternoon by a score of 4 to 0.

NEWTON EXHIBIT AT FAIR

Work of the Home Making School at Panama-Pacific Exposition

When Mrs. Brown tells Mrs. Black that she is not going to have her Ellen take up domestic science at school, as she can learn to cook and sew just as well at home, we feel for her a certain respect; but we are glad that many thousands of earnest, sincere mothers of the type of Mrs. Brown will have an opportunity to inspect the charts and the three hundred colored slides which illustrate logically and completely the work accomplished in the household arts department of a typical home-making school, the Vocational School of Newton, Massachusetts, as these charts and slides are exhibited in the Palace of Education at the Panama-Pacific Exposition. This is the largest the roots of things, although those roots might be of the potato or some other tuber instead of a Latin or a French verb, if she took such courses as are outlined here. As Mrs. Brown looks at the slides, she visualizes, with a mother's imagination, her Ellen in each one of them. For instance, she sees that if Ellen learned to cook a potato in these classes, she would also learn certain fundamental principles of food values that might make a difference in the dietary of a family. She sees that the girls in the cooking class get "behind the cook book" and that they understand the laws which govern a successful menu. In brief the pupils grasp the underlying theories of exhibit sent from any home-making school in the country; and as Massachusetts is the only state which made the vocational work of its schools its sole educational exhibit at the Fair, the Newton slides have attracted much attention, and have been an important contribution to the Home-Making school movement.

We are positive that the slides will prove to Mrs. Brown that for these pupils domestic science means very much more than "cooking and sewing," and that she will discern in all the work illustrated here a real attempt to establish household art courses upon such a basis as to cause the Ellen Browns in these classes to regard home-making as a dignified profession, demanding knowledge, training and skill of a high order.

A HOME MAKING SCHOOL

We would emphasize the fact that this school is distinctly a home-making school. It is not a school in which classes in domestic science have been added to the regular curriculum of the ordinary academic school. The aim kept constantly before the two hundred girls in the school is the development of the skillful, successful home-maker. Notice the word used is "home-maker." The meaning of this word is the corner stone upon which the work of these girls is based, and it is the test of their training.

ADVANCE IN HOUSEHOLD ARTS

We are also sure that before Mrs. Brown completes the inspection of these slides she will see that in this early part of the twentieth century there is a decided advance in all that is implied in the terms "household arts" over the methods that were employed by even her own generation, and that she will discern that her Ellen would be digging right down to

THE WORK OF THE CANNING CLUB

EDITORIAL

A noticeable feature of the addresses which have been made at the Conference of Governors held this week at the State House, was the constant argument and appeal for more and yet more power for the executive branch of public administration. It manifested itself in matters regarding the state budget, giving the executive larger powers over financial affairs, in the argument for the short ballot, giving the executive wider range in appointments, and in the so-called governor's initiative, which would allow an appeal to the state electorate on all matters recommended by the governor, which failed to pass the Legislature.

While it is true that there is a growing sentiment that the executive branch of the government, whether, national, state or municipal, is more representative of the people than the legislative, there is considerable danger in many of the schemes to centralize power in the hands of one man. Our fathers laid down the good old doctrine that there should be no interference by the executive branch with the legislative branch and vice versa, and it is even now, an excellent principle to follow. It is supplemented with that old saying, that "in the multitude of counselors there is safety," and in matters affecting the pocketbook of the people, the maxim is peculiarly applicable. The present Municipal Finance law of this state, which prohibits the legislative branch from increasing the amounts or adding new items to the city budget, as submitted by the executive branch, is entirely wrong in principle and certainly ought not to be extended to the finances of the state.

Present indications point to an unusually bitter contest at the coming state primary for the various Republican nominations. Mr. McCall and Lieut. Gov. Cushing are preparing for a hot finish during the next few weeks.
Councillor Ham and President Coolidge are making a strenuous canvass of the state. Sheriff Fairbairn is having the fight of his political life with Mr. A. B. Messer, the Republican state committee, and there are other minor contests which will add to the boiling of the political pot.

An important, although apparently neglected factor, in the fight is the new form of ballot, which is to be used for the first time, and which is prophesied will throw out fully fifty per cent of the total vote on account of the failure to keep the markings to but one party.
All the candidates ought to emphasize in all their speeches, the importance of marking the ballot in the right way.

While the country at large is giving considerable attention to the great question of our preparedness for war, the people of this city ought to be agitating the advisability of reinstating military drill at the High School. This would be a simple and at the same time, a valuable experience for our young men, and one, which would be an excellent physical training, even if the necessity for future military duty never arrived. If our school committee does not take this matter up on its own initiative, petitions ought to be circulated and public sentiment aroused in this direction.

The expenditure of $30,000 of the state's money for the purpose of mobilizing the state militia is an unwarranted extravagance. Coming so soon after the annual tour of duty of the militia, it can be of little benefit to the men themselves and will be but a fleeting spectacle to those who will witness the parade in Boston. Massachusetts expects that the visiting governors of other states will be entertained with dignity and generosity, but Governor Walsh is overstepping the mark in this respect.

Every encouragement ought to be given to our Police Department during the next few weeks to reduce the petty pilfering of fruit to a minimum. If every one who notices the stealing of fruit would take pains to immediately notify the police, it would be a great aid in this respect.

EXHIBITION

An exhibition of the products of Children's Gardens will be held at Horticultural Hall, 309 Massachusetts avenue, Boston, Saturday and Sunday, August 28 and 29, 1915. This exhibition, which is free to all, will be open Saturday from 12 M. to 6 P. M., and on Sunday from 2 to 6 P. M. All persons interested in the work of the horticultural education of the children are cordially invited to attend this exhibition.

POLICE NOTES

Lyman J. Beede, who claims New York city as his home, was arrested Sunday night by patrolman Hargreaves following a communication over the telephone from Mabel Dow of 366 Waltham street, West Newton, that Beede who had asked for the use of her telephone, took $2.75 which was nearby as he was leaving the house. In Court Tuesday Judge Kennedy gave him 30 days in the House of Correction.

A fine of $5 was imposed upon Michels, Emilio, 21, of 4 Cook street, and Caselaro, Loreto, 21, of 6 Cook street, Nonantum, Monday morning, in the Police Court, on the charge of being present at a game on Sunday.

Patrolman McAleer, it is alleged, saw a crap game in progress Sunday afternoon on Cook street and managed to get hold of the above men.

ON TOP OF MT. WASHINGTON

Mr. Frank Burt and Miss Grace M.
Burt of Charlesbank road, and Mr. Alfred H. Wing of Hunnewell avenue, were present last Saturday at the opening of the New Summit House on top of Mt. Washington. Mr. Burt was the second person to register at the new hotel. Mr. Burt is the publisher of "Among the Clouds" and has been on top of Mt. Washington for the past 28 summers. Mr. Burt climbed the mountain on Friday by the second Ethan Allen Crawford path, a trail opened nearly a hundred years ago and now almost forgotten. Mr. Wing went to the summit with a party from Gray's Inn.

DEATH OF MRS. MASKELL

Mrs. Anna Marie Maskell, widow of the late Stephen J. Maskell, died Wednesday, August 25th at her home on Adams street, Newton after an illness of several months.

The deceased is survived by two sons, Dr. Leonard J. Maskell and Edmund F. Maskell of Newton and one daughter Sister Blanche Marie of the Sisters of Charity of Elizabeth, New Jersey.

The funeral will take place Saturday morning at the Church of Our Lady. A solemn High Mass of Requiem will be celebrated at 10 o'clock.
The burial will be in the family lot in Holyhood Cemetery.

NORUMBEGA PARK

Sunday night an excellent program has been arranged including the feature photo play "The Earl of Pawtucket" with Lawrence D'Orsay in the leading part. Next week the bright, breezy musical comedy "The Commodore" has been secured. This is from the facile pen of Matthew Olt and deals with things nautical in a charming manner. Every attraction from the magnificent Zoological Gardens right through the list of high class amusements are in gala attire with the visit of the Governors and the approaching holiday. For an ideal outing, visit Norumbega at Auburndale on the Charles.

NARROW ESCAPE

Wentworth Richards, the fifteen year old son of Mrs. Florence Richards of Dale street, Newtonville had a narrow escape from drowning Tuesday morning at Crystal Lake, where he was bathing. He was seen to dive from the raft, and when he failed to come to the surface, two other bathers went in search of him, and brought the body to the surface, where Life Guard Walter Mullen took him in charge and after bringing him ashore, administered first aid with such good effect that he was soon able to be taken home in the police ambulance.

TO THE PUBLIC

Since its organization, twenty eight

Shall the Proposed Amendment to the Constitution Enabling Women to Vote be Approved and Ratified

EX-GOV. GLYNN A CONVERT

One of the latest converts to woman suffrage is the ex-governor of New York, Martin H. Glynn. Speaking recently at the Panama exposition, Mr.
Glynn said that his stay in California meant the end of his opposition to woman suffrage.

"As the train carries me away," he added, "the wheels will seem to say,
'Votes for women, votes for women.'"

CHICAGO WOMEN'S POWER

Equal suffrage in Illinois solved the Chicago garbage question. This is the opinion of Mary McDowell. Lucy B.
Owen and all the women who had for years been working actively, but in vain, for better garbage disposal. As soon as the suffrage bill passed, the whole atmosphere changed. The authorities that had always turned a deaf ear to the women promptly gave them what they wanted.

Opponents of equal rights, however,
continue to quote a letter from Dr.
George B. Young, health commissioner of Chicago, in which he says: "The suffrage question, as far as I can see, has had nothing whatever to do with the arrangement as finally made."
Commenting upon this, Dr. Sophonisba
P. Breckinridge, Assistant Dean of Women at the University of Chicago, wrote in the Boston Transcript of April 8, 1915:

"It seems very strange, if not disin-genious, that he (Dr. Young) does not distinguish between the fact that any 'arrangement' at all was made, and the particular kind of arrangement. For nearly twenty years the women had been begging that some 'arrangement' should be made, and that arrangement should be such as could be agreed upon after expert study of the situation.
In season and out of season they had urged that a plan be made. For two years before September of 1913, when the contract to which Dr. Young referred was known to expire, the city waste committee of the Woman's City Club haunted the City Hall begging for a plan.

"During those last two years there were resolutions introduced into the city council, discussion delayed, then committees and commissions appointed.
They reported and saw their reports filed away. No women were on any of these committees or commissions, no recognition beyond a patient and indignant hearing was given to their efforts at co-operation, delay followed delay, until the news came that the Governor had signed the suffrage measure. Within a month (June 16-17, 1915) not only was a new commission created with an appropriation for the employment of a staff, but the women had urged, but two women were named on the commission. If this had only been done a month earlier, when the decision of the Governor was still in question, the connection between the two would have been less obvious.

"Even so, no sufficient plan could be made in time to meet the exigencies of the situation, and the contract made five years before did expire. The date of its expiration had been known all along, the voteless women had called attention to the fact, but only when the political power had been assured them was action really taken.

"These statements can all be confirmed by referring to the report of the city waste commission, finally created and finally effecting the sanitary conditions so long urged. The women of Chicago would surely urge the women of Boston to obtain and try the instrument which they have secured, and of which, they have already made effective use.

DEATH OF MR. RISING

Mr. Julius A. Rising, a resident of Newton Centre for the past 20 years, died last Saturday at his home in Bradford Court, after an illness of two months. Mr. Rising was born at Hartford, Conn., Jan. 5, 1840, and was taken by his parents at the age of ten to Roxbury, where he was educated in the public schools. He first entered the hat and shoe business in which his father was engaged, but later, after his marriage to Miss Emily F.
Bray, he became associated with the firm of Bray & Hayes, of which the present firm of James A. Hayes & Co. is the successor. For thirty years he has been connected with the accounting department of this concern. Mr.
Rising was greatly interested in music and for some years was organist at the Park Street Church of Boston.

He is survived by a widow, two sons, Messrs. Frederick C. and William D. Rising, and one daughter, Mrs.
Marion W. Noble, all of Newton Centre.

Funeral services were held from his late home on Monday afternoon, Rev.
Edward M. Noyes, D.D., pastor of the First Church, officiating, and the burial was at the Newton Cemetery.

DEATH OF MRS. BENYON

Mrs. Ruth Anna Benyon, widow of the late Abner I. Benyon, died at her home on Charlesbank road, Newton, last Saturday. Mrs. Benyon was born in Boston May 18, 1831, and was 84 years of age. Mrs. Benyon has resided in this city for many years, and was quite prominent in Auburndale society a quarter of a century ago. She is survived by five sons, Col. George H.
Benyon of Watertown, Luther P. Ben-yon of Providence, R. I., John P. Ben-yon, Abner E. Benyon and Charles Benyon of this city, and one daughter, Mrs. George E. Bourne.

Funeral services were held at her late home on Monday, in charge of Mr. Frederick A. Gould of the Christian Science Church, and the burial was at Mt. Auburn.

Feminists constantly maintain that suffrage is merely a step toward Peninism. When women have taken that step and become voters, then it is assumed that they are ready to take further steps toward the feminist goal.
Therefore in Chicago where women are voters, and Feminists whom they invite to address them giving them strong doctrine.

In February, Hutchins Hapgood told a Chicago suffrage audience that suffrage was merely a mask. It was one of women's strong simple lies to drive men on. Its essence was not a desire for suffrage, but "to widen woman's function" from that of giving comfort and joy to one man and his children to "collaborating" with more than one man and his children.

At the recent National Suffrage Convention in Chicago, Professor W. L. Thomas of Chicago University told his hearers that "Any girl, mentally mature, has a right to motherhood, and that 'woman's assertion of her right to motherhood is a revolution that is coming and no one can stop it.'"

What were the comments of the prominent suffragists who heard Professor Thomas' address? Dr. Shaw said:

"The address has set every woman who heard it thinking, and they are thinking women who will consider both sides of such a proposition. Political emancipation is not the only emancipa-tion. I do not believe in mother love. I believe in mother intelligence.
I believe Prof. Thomas took the proper place to present those views."

Miss Alice Stone Blackwell, dreading the effect of this doctrine in the states where women have not yet taken the "first step," gently remonstrated, saying
"I do not agree with Prof. Thomas, granting at the same time that he has a right to his opinions."

The next morning the Convention passed a resolution carefully denying "the remotest tendency to criticism of the Professor's opinions." Can anyone doubt what sort of a reception such immoral teachings would have received at anti-suffrage conventions?

As Dr. Shaw has well said, "Political emancipation is not the only emancipa-tion." Evidently the suffragist and the feminist leaders are fighting also for emancipation from the principles of Christianity and monotheism.

In California, too, where women have taken the "first step," the Feminists are being coming out into the open. The California Review of April 1915 says that owing to their "political and economic awakening" girls in western towns are leading perfectly "free" lives, and laugh at all efforts to restrict them to the old American code of morals. Lottie N. Montgomery of Los Angeles, writing in "The Forum" of April 1915, declares that it is owing to the fact that unmarried women are no longer chaste that women are progressing so rapidly.

She says "the only objection to this is that it breeds deception, in as much as it is done secretly instead of openly, and above board. However, as the public becomes enlightened the cloak of secrecy will be dropped gradually, and she looks forward to a time when there will be no husbands and no marriage, but every woman will be a law unto herself, and there will be 'free' mothers in a 'free' world! This is Feminism, toward which suffrage is but a step."

Ellen Key, the great Swedish Feminist, says in Harper's Weekly of Jan.
1914 that one of the results of the Feminist movement is the immoral lives "led by many wives, among whom are mothers, who in their children have the greatest possible stimulus to better lives, and by many girls with splendid possibilities." The early Feminists, she said, "did not foresee these results, but if they had they would no more have desisted from their teachings than would Jesus if he had foreseen the inquisition."

Let no one be deceived by the fact that not much of this talk is heard in the eastern campaign states. The suffrage leaders are clever enough to know that it is dangerous until the vote is secured. Beatrice Forbes-Robertson Hale, the popular suffrage speaker, warned her associates months ago that they must keep Feminism in the background in order to win the ballot in New York. But when the vote is won, then the Feminists dare to come into the open. Many a young girl, caught by the movement, will undoubtedly be led wrong before she has maturity and intelligence to understand the falseness of these doctrines, and to realize that a child, too, has some rights, one of them being to have two parents!

The feminist scheme of substituting free alliances for monogamous marriage menaces our civilization. The unmarried mother sins not only against herself, but her child and society. The feminist is pulling down the institution of home and family, regardless of the fact that the injury to children and to the race will be irreparable.

The woman suffrage movement should be repudiated because of the type and attitude of the leaders it has drawn to its cause. The Rev. Dr. Anna Shaw, Mrs. Catt and Mrs. Belmont accepted leaders, all are opposed to the doctrine that the family is the unit of society and the state. The alliance of the suffragists and the socialists has been welcomed by the leaders, and in Massachusetts socialists have always spoken for the suffragists at the state house hearings and they speak from the same platform during this campaign. Their cause has also enlisted the active aid of Max Eastman, (editor of "The Masses"), of Giovanni, the I.
W. U. agitator of Lawrence fame, and of Lincoln Steffens, an avowed anarchist, now a lecturer in the Ferrer school for New York which proclaims in its first announcement, "We wish men and women to be free and to that end we are opposed to religion, war, property and all things that divide men into camps and nationalities. If parents wish their children to retain some of their prejudice on these subjects, our school is a bad place to which to send them."

"Every unstable, license-loving and socialist element in our population is actively aiding the suffrage cause."

Mrs. O. D. Oliphant, of New Jersey, who is now speaking in Pennsylvania, is opening the eyes of many people by her exhibition of feminist doctrines and the signed advertisements of the National American Woman Suffrage Association that have appeared in revolutionary socialist publications that ridicule Christianity and cartoon even the Crucifixion. Few persons know the facts about feminism and its allies.

A woman who used to be a suffrage leader recently told the anti: "Indeed, many of the suffragists themselves of the better sort are beginning to doubt, and to fear feminism and the vote, in their hearts."

Helen Watterson Moody's little book of essays, The Unquiet Sea, was published several years ago, before Feminism had become rampant, and it shows no sympathy with the demands of some of her sisters for "emancipa-tion." In regard to woman's use of one talent which might reasonably influence our judgment of the need of five or ten fields for her superior "insight" and "tact" and "unsselfishness," Mrs. Moody says: We women have been wearying ourselves in the rush after a superficial knowledge of many things, and particularly of the subjects that have especially engaged the attention of men, in order that we might become their political peers, and reform their political abuses. Yet in the management of that one kingdom that has been ours from the beginning, we are harking back to the Middle Ages and the institutions which modern society cast aside long ago. Like the King in the story, our Queens want to "go out governing by the day, or week," while the kingdom that has always been theirs rests in its primitive state of anarchy and disorganization. . . . It might appear to a profane observer of the situation, that, until women shall have given evidence of some small political sagacity, some desire for reform, and a very little capacity for organization in that department of the world's sociology with which the home is concerned, there is no glaring injustice in denying them a share in the government of the country.

OLD RESIDENT DEAD

Mr. Joshua Waterhouse Sawyer, one of the oldest residents of this city, died last week Thursday at his home on High street, Newton Upper Falls, from heart failure, following an attack of the grippe.

Mr. Sawyer was in his 93rd year and had always enjoyed the best of health throughout his long life. Mr. Sawyer was born at Scarborough, Me., Dec. 22, 1822. Mr. Sawyer was engaged in business in Portland, Me., for more than 60 years coming to Newton about ten years ago, after retiring from active business life. He was a life member of Maine Lodge I. O. O. F., and was the oldest member of the order in the country. Mr. Sawyer was twice married, and is survived by a widow, who was Miss Ellen Winchester of Portland, Me., and seven children, Mr. Robert H. Sawyer of Riverside, Cal., Mrs. Grenville Jordan of Portland, Me., Mrs. Charles F. Libby of Clinton, Ont., Canada, Mrs. Hiram A. Sherman of Tolono, Ill., and Mr. Winchester Sawyer, Mrs. Lewis P. Everett and Miss Grace B. Sawyer of Newton Upper Falls.

Funeral services were held on Monday in Wilde Memorial Chapel, Evergreen Cemetery, Portland, Me., Rev. Henry Blanchard, D.D., minister of the Universalist Church, which Mr. Sawyer had attended for many years while a resident of Portland, officiated in a most impressive manner.

MAJESTIC THEATRE—Love, passion, fear, hatred, self-sacrifice and loyalty are all blended in "Today," the most remarkable drama of modern conditions, which comes to the Majestic Theatre, Boston, the week of August 30. A young wife's lust for gaudy tinsel and a mad desire to gratify her social ambitions tempt her to betray the trust reposed in her by an unforgetting husband. The denouement is electrical; the audience at the crisis being wrought to a pitch of speechless expectancy and quickening pulse. "Today" is the joint effort of George Broadhurst and Abraham Schomer, and had the distinction of scoring the biggest dramatic hit of last season, having remained on Broadway, New York, many weeks longer than any drama produced during the year. "Today" is described as a most unusual drama of a certain phase of our own modern life, the existence of which has never been denied. It is not a white slave play, nor a red light drama, but it does depict, realistically and dramatically, the great modern menace due to the feminine fondness for finery and the evils attendant thereupon, affording an intimate study of a woman's soul that has no equal. Edwin Arden, the famous actor who first played the leading part in "Today" will appear at the Majestic and will be supported by an all-star cast direct from New York.

Those interested in brightening their homes should not fail to see the exhibition of Electric and Gas Lighting Fixtures as shown by McKenney & Waterbury Co., Franklin street, corner Congress, Boston.

The Exploits of Elaine

A Detective Novel and a Motion Picture Drama

SYNOPSIS.

The New York police are mystified by a series of murders of prominent men. The principal clue to the murderer is the warning letter which is sent the victims, signed with a "Clutching Hand." The latest victim of the mysterious assassin is Taylor Dodge, the insurance president. What Kennedy accomplishes is told by his friend Jameson, a newspaper man. Elaine is kidnapped by the Clutching Hand, but is rescued by Kennedy, who has discovered her whereabouts through using third degree methods on one of the crooks.

EIGHTH EPISODE

The Hidden Voice.

"Jameson, wake up!"
The strain of the Dodge case was beginning to tell on me, for it was keeping us at work at all kinds of hours to circumvent the Clutching Hand, by far the cleverest criminal with whom Kennedy had ever had anything to do.

I leaped out of bed, still in my pajamas, and stood for a moment staring about. Then I ran into the living room. I looked about, rubbing my eyes, startled. No one was there.

"Hey—Jameson—wake up!"
It was spooky.

"Where—the deuce—are you?" I demanded.

Suddenly I heard the voice again—no doubt about it, either.

"Here I am—over on the couch!" I scratched my head, puzzled. There was certainly no one on that couch.

A laugh greeted me. Plainly, though, it came from the couch. I went over to it and, ridiculous as it seemed, began to throw aside the pillows.

There lay nothing but a little oblong oak box, perhaps eight or ten inches square at the ends. In the face were two peculiar square holes, and from the top projected a black disk, about the size of a watch, fastened on a swinging metal arm. In the face of the disk were several perforated holes.

I picked up the strange looking thing in wonder, and from that magic oak box actually came a burst of laughter.

"Come over to the laboratory, right away," pealed forth a merry voice. "I've something to show you."

"Well," I gasped, "what do you know about that?"

Very early that morning Craig had got up, leaving me snoring. Cases never wearied him. He thrived on excitement.

He had gone over to the laboratory and set to work in a corner over another of those peculiar boxes, exactly like that which he had already left in our rooms.

Half an hour afterward I walked into the laboratory, feeling a little sheepish over the practical joke, but none the less curious to find out all about it.

"What is it?" I asked, indicating the apparatus.

"A vocophone," he replied, "still laughing, 'the loud speaking telephone, the little box that hears and talks. It talks right out in meeting, too—no transmitter to hold to the mouth, no receiver to hold to the ear. You see, this transmitter is so sensitive that it picks up even a whisper, and the receiver is placed back of those two megaphone-like pyramids."

He was standing at a table, carefully packing up one of the vocophones and a lot of wire.

"I believe the Clutching Hand has been shadowing the Dodge house," he continued thoughtfully. "As long as we watch the place, too, he will do nothing. But if we should seem, ostentatiously, not to be watching, perhaps he may try something, and we may be able to get a clue to his identity over this vocophone. See?"

I nodded. "We've got to run him down somehow," I agreed.

"Yes," he said, taking his coat and hat. "I am going to connect up one of these things in Miss Dodge's library and arrange with the telephone company for a clear wire so that we can listen in here, where that fellow will never suspect."

At about the same time that Craig and I sallied forth on this new mission, Elaine was arranging some flowers on a stand near the corner of the Dodge library where the secret panel was in which her father had hidden the papers for the possession of which the Clutching Hand had murdered him.

She had moved away from the table, but, as she did so, her dress caught in something in the woodwork. She tried to loosen it and in so doing touched the little metallic spring on which her dress had caught.

Instantly, to her utter surprise, the panel moved. It slid open, disclosing a strong box.

Elaine took it, amused, looked at it a moment, then carried it to a table and opened it.

Inside were some papers, sealed in an envelope and marked "Limpie Red Correspondence."

"They must be the Clutching Hand papers!" she exclaimed to herself, hesitating a moment, in doubt what to do.

She seized the telephone and eagerly called Kennedy's number.

"Hello," answered a voice.

"Is that you, Craig?" she asked excitedly.

"No, this is Mr. Jameson."

"Oh, Mr. Jameson, I've discovered the Clutching Hand papers," she began, more and more excited.

"Have you read them?" came back the voice quickly.

"No; shall I?"

"Then don't unseal them," cautioned the voice. "Put them back exactly as you found them and I'll tell Mr. Kennedy the moment I can get hold of him."

"All right," said Elaine. "I'll do that. And please get him as soon as you possibly can."

"I will."

"I'm going out shopping now," she returned, suddenly. "But, tell him I'll be right back—right away."

"Very well."

Hanging up the receiver, Elaine dutifully replaced the papers in the box and returned the box to its secret hiding place, pressing the spring and sliding the panel shut.

A few minutes later she left the house in the Dodge car.

Outside our laboratory, leaning up against a railing, Dan the Dude, an emissary of the Clutching Hand, whose dress now greatly belied his underworld "monniker," had been shadowing us, watching to see when we left.

The moment we disappeared, he raised his hand carefully above his head and made the sign of the Clutching Hand. Far down the street, in a closed car, the Clutching Hand himself, his face masked, gave an answering sign.

A moment later he left the car, gazing about stealthily. Not a soul was in sight and he managed to make his way to the door of our laboratory without being observed.

Probably he thought that the papers might be at the laboratory, for he had repeatedly failed to locate them at the Dodge house. At any rate he was busily engaged in ransacking drawers and cabinets, in the laboratory, when the telephone suddenly rang.

An instant he hesitated. Then, disguising his voice as much as he could to imitate mine, he took up the receiver.

"Hello!" he answered.

His face was a study in all that was dark as he realized that it was Elaine calling. He clenched his crooked hand even more viciously.

"Have you read them?" he asked, curbing his impatience as she unsuspiciously poured forth her story, supposedly to me.

"Then don't unseal them," he hastened to reply. "Put them back. Then there can be no question about them. You can open them before witnesses."

For a moment he paused, then added: "Put them back, and tell no one of their discovery. I will tell Mr. Kennedy the moment I can get him."

Clutching Hand studied for a moment and then grabbed the telephone again.

"Hello, Dan," he called when he got his number. "Miss Dodge is going shopping. I want you and the other Falsers to follow her—delay her all you can. Use your own judgment."

It was what had come to be known in his organization as the "Brotherhood of Falsers." There, in the back room of a low dive, were Dan the Dude, the emissary who had been loitering about the laboratory, a gunman, Dago Mike, a couple of women, slatterns, one known as Kitty the Hawk, and a boy of eight or ten, whom they called Billy.

"All right, Chief," shouted back Dan, their leader, as he hung up the telephone after noting carefully the hasty instructions. "We'll do it—trust us."

With alacrity the Brotherhood went their separate ways.

Elaine had not been gone long from the house when Craig and I arrived there.

"Too bad," greeted Jennings, "but Miss Elaine has just gone shopping and I don't know when she'll be back."

Aunt Josephine greeted us cordially, and Craig set down the vocophone package he was carrying.

"I'm not going to let anything happen here to Miss Elaine again if I can help it," remarked Craig in a low tone, a moment later, gazing about the library.

"What are you thinking of doing?" asked Aunt Josephine keenly.

"I'm going to put in a vocophone," he returned, unwrapping it.

"What's that?" she asked.

"A loud speaking telephone—connected with my laboratory," he explained, repeating what he had already told me, while she listened almost awe-struck at the latest scientific wonder.

He was looking about, trying to figure out just where it could be placed to best advantage, when he approached the suit of armor.

"I see you have brought it back and had it repaired," he remarked to Aunt Josephine. Suddenly his face lighted up. "Ah—an idea!" he exclaimed. "No one will ever think to look inside that."

"Now, Mrs. Dodge," he said finally, as he had completed installing the thing and hiding the wire under carpets and rugs until it ran out to the connection which he made with the telephone, "don't breathe a word of it—to anyone. We don't know whom to trust or suspect."

Elaine's car had stopped finally at a shop on Fifth avenue. She stepped out and entered, leaving her chauffeur to wait.

As she did so, Dan and Billy sidled along the crowded sidewalk.

Dan the Dude left Billy and Billy surreptitiously drew from under his coat a half loaf of bread. With a glance about, he dropped it into the gutter close to the entrance to Elaine's car. Then he withdrew a little distance.

When Elaine came out and approached her car, Billy, looking as cold and forlorn as could be, shot forward. Pretending to spy the dirty piece of bread in the gutter, he made a dive for it, just as Elaine was about to step into the car.

Elaine, surprised, drew back. Billy picked up the piece of bread and with all the actions of having discovered a treasure began to gnaw at it voraciously.

Shocked at the disgusting sight, she tried to take the bread away from him.

"I know it's dirty, miss," whimpered Billy, "but it's the first food I've seen for four days."

Instantly Elaine was full of sympathy. She had taken the food away. That would not suffice.

"What's your name, little boy?" she asked.

"Billy," he replied, blubbering.

"Where do you live?"

"With me mother and father—they're sick—nothing to eat—"

He was whimpering an address far over on the East side.

"Get into the car," Elaine directed.

"Gee—but this is swell," he cried, with no fake, this time.

On they went, through the tenement canyons, dodging children and pushcarts, stopping first at a grocer's, then at a butcher's and a delicatessen. Finally the car stopped where Billy directed. Billy hobbled out, followed by Elaine and her chauffeur, his arms piled high with provisions. She was indeed a lovely Lady Bountiful as a crowd of kids quickly surrounded the car.

In the meantime Dago Mike and Kitty the Hawk had gone to a wretched flat, before which Billy stopped. Kitty sat on the bed, putting dark circles under her eyes with a blackened cork. She was very thin and emaciated, but it was dissipation that had done it. Dago Mike was correspondingly poorly dressed.

He had paused beside the window to look out. "She's coming," he announced finally.

Kitty hastily jumped into the rickety bed, while Mike took up a crutch that was standing idly in a corner. She coughed resignedly and he limped about, forlorn. They had assumed their parts, which were almost to the burlesque of poverty, when the door was pushed open and Billy burst in, followed by Elaine and the chauffeur.

"Oh, ma—oh, pa," he cried, running forward and kissing his pseudo parents, as Elaine, overcome with sympathy, directed the chauffeur to lay the things on a shaky table.

Just then the door opened again. All were genuinely surprised this time.

By a Sort of Instinct Kennedy

"Elaine!" He Exclaimed, Turning Pale.

for a prim, spick and span, middle-aged woman entered.

"I am Miss Statistix, of the organized charities," she announced, looking around sharply. "I saw your car standing below told me you were up here. I came up to see whether you were aiding really deserving poor."

She laid a marked emphasis on the word, pursing up her lips. There was no mistaking the apprehension that these fine birds of prey had of her, either.

"Why—wh—what's the matter?" asked Elaine, fidgeting uncomfortably.

"This man is a gunman, that woman is a bad woman, the boy is Billy the Bread Snatcher," she answered precisely, drawing out a card on which to record something. "and you, miss, are a fool!"

There was no combating Miss Statistix. She overwhelmed all arguments by the very exactness of her personality.

Elaine departed, speechless, properly squelched, followed by her chauffeur.

Meanwhile, a closed car, such as had stood across from the laboratory, had drawn up not far from the Dodge house. Near it was a man in rather shabby clothes and a visored cap on which were the words in dull gold lettering, "Metropolitan Window Cleaning company." He carried a bucket and a small extension ladder.

In the darkened recesses of the car was the Clutching Hand himself, masked as usual. He had his watch in his hand and was giving most minute instructions to the window cleaner about something. As the latter turned to go, a sharp observer would have noted that it was Dan the Dude, still further disguised.

A few moments later, Dan appeared at the servants' entrance of the Dodge house and rang the bell. Jennings, who happened to be down there, came to the door.

"Man to clean the windows," saluted the bogus cleaner, touching his hat in a way quietly to call attention to the words on it and drawing from his pocket a faded written order.

"All right," nodded Jennings, ex-

One of the maids was sweeping in the hall as Dan went toward the window, about to wash it.

"I wonder whether I locked those windows?" muttered Jennings, pausing in the hallway. "I guess I'd better make sure."

He had taken only a step toward the library again when Dan watchfully caught sight of him. It would never do to have Jennings snooping around there now. Quick action was necessary. Dan knocked over a costly Sevres vase.

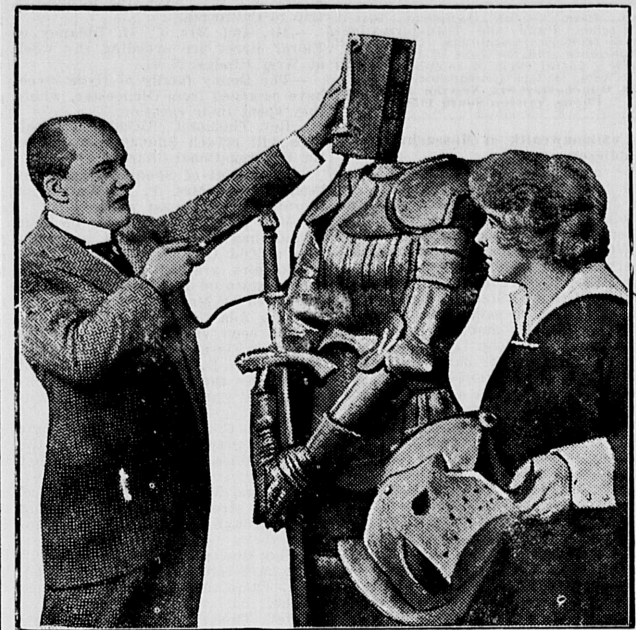

"There—clumsy—see what you've done!" berated Jennings, starting to pick up the pieces.

Dan had acted his part well and promptly. In the library Clutching Hand was busily engaged at that moment beside the secret panel searching for the spring that released it. He ran his finger along the woodwork, pausing here and there without succeeding.

"Confound it!" he muttered, searching feverishly.

Kennedy, having made the arrangements with the telephone company by which he had a clear wire from the Dodge house to his laboratory, had rejoined me there and was putting on the finishing touches on his installation of the vocophone.

Every now and then he would switch it on, and we would listen in it as he demonstrated the wonderful little instrument to me. We had amining the order and finding it apparently all right.

Dan followed him in, taking the ladder and bucket upstairs, where Aunt Josephine was still reading.

"The man to clean the windows, ma'am," apologized Jennings.

"Oh, very well," she nodded, taking up her book. Then, recalling the frequent injunctions of Kennedy, she paused long enough to speak quietly to Jennings.

"Stay here and watch him," she whispered as she went out.

Jennings nodded, while Dan opened a window and set to work.

Elaine now decided to go home.

From his closed car, the Clutching Hand gazed intently at the Dodge house. He could see Dan on the ladder, now washing the library window, his back toward him.

Dan turned slowly and made the sign of the hand. Turning to his chauffeur, the master criminal spoke a few hurried words in a low tone and the driver hurried off.

A few minutes later the driver might have been seen entering a nearby drug store and going into the telephone booth. Without a moment's hesitation he called upon the Dodge house, and Marie, Elaine's maid, answered.

"Is Jennings there?" he asked.

"Tell him a friend wants to speak to him."

"Wait a minute," she answered. "I'll get him."

Marie went toward the library, leaving the telephone off the hook. Dan was washing the windows, half inside, half outside the house, while Jennings was trying to be very busy, although it was apparent that he was watching Dan closely.

"A friend of yours wants to speak to you over the telephone, Jennings," said Marie, as she came into the library.

The butler responded slowly, with a covert glance at Dan.

No sooner had they gone, however, than Dan climbed all the way into the room, ran to the door and looked after them. Then he ran to the window. Across and down the street, the Clutching Hand was gazing at the house. He had seen Dan disappear and suspected that the time had come.

Sure enough, there was the sign of the hand. He hastily got out of the car and hurried up the street. All this time the chauffeur was keeping Jennings busy over the telephone with some trumped-up story.

As the master criminal came in by the ladder through the open window, Dan was on guard, listening down the hallway. A signal from Dan, and Clutching Hand slid back of the portieres. Jennings was returning.

"I've finished these windows," announced Dan as the butler reappeared.

"Now, I'll clean the hall windows," Jennings followed like a shadow.

No sooner had they gone than Clutching Hand stealthily came from behind the portieres.

heard the window cleaner and Jennings, but thought nothing of it at the time.

Once, however, Craig paused, and I saw him listening more intently than usual.

"They've gone out," he muttered, "but surely there is some one in the Dodge library."

"I listened, too. The thing was so sensitive that even a whisper could be magnified, and I certainly did hear something."

Kennedy frowned. What was that scratching noise? Could it be Jennings? Perhaps it was Rusty.

Just then we could distinguish a sound as though someone had moved about.

"No—that's not Jennings," cried Craig. "He went out."

He looked at me a moment. The same stealthy noise was repeated.

"It's the Clutching Hand!" he exclaimed excitedly.

A moment later Dan hurried into the Dodge library.

"For heaven's sake, Chief, hurry!" he whispered hoarsely. "The Falsers must have fallen down. The girl herself is coming!"

Dan himself had no time to waste. He retreated into the hallway just as Jennings was opening the door for Elaine.

Marie took her wraps and left her, while Elaine handed her numerous packages to Jennings.

Dan watched every motion.

"Put them away, Jennings," she said softly.

Jennings had obeyed and gone upstairs. Elaine moved toward the library. Dan took a quiet step or two behind her, in the same direction.

In the library Clutching Hand was now frantically searching for the spring. He heard Elaine coming and dodged behind the curtains again just as she entered.

With a hasty look about, she saw no one. Then she went quickly to the panel, found the spring and pressed it. So many queer things had happened to her since she went out the safety of the papers.

The panel opened. They were there, all right. She opened the box and took them out, hesitating to break the seal before Kennedy arrived.

Stealthy and tigerlike, the Clutching Hand crept up behind her. As he did so, Dan gazed in through the portieres from the hall.

With a spring, Clutching Hand leaped at Elaine, snatching at the papers. Elaine clung to them tenaciously, in spite of the surprise, and they struggled for them, Clutching Hand holding one hand over her mouth to prevent her screaming. Instantly Dan was there, aiding his chief.

"Choke her! Strangle her! Don't let her scream!" he ground out.

They fought viciously. Would she succeed? It was two desperate, unscrupulous men against one frail girl.

Suddenly, from the man in armor

in the corner, as if by a miracle, came a deep, loud voice.

"Help! Help! Murder! Police! They are strangling me!"

The effect was terrific. Clutching Hand and Dan, hardened in crime as they were, fell back, dazed, overcome for the moment at the startling effect.

They looked about. Not a soul. Then, to their utter consternation, from the helmet again came the deep, vibrant warning.

"Help! Murder! Police!"

Kennedy and I had been listening over the vocophone, for the moment nonplused at the fellow's daring.

Then we heard from the uncanny instrument: "For Heaven's sake, Chief, hurry. The Falsers have fallen down. The girl herself is coming!"

What it meant we did not know. But Craig was almost beside himself, as he ordered me to get the police by telephone, if there was any way to block them. Only instant action would count, however. What to do?

We could hear the master criminal plainly fumbling now.

"Yes, that's the Clutching hand," he repeated.

"Wait," I cautioned, "someone else is coming!"

By a sort of instinct he seemed to recognize the sounds.

"Elaine!" he exclaimed, paling.

Instantly followed, in less than I can tell it, the sounds of a suppressed shuffle.

"He has seized her—gagged her," I cried in an agony of suspense.

We could now hear everything that was going on in the library. Craig was wildly excited. As for me, I was speechless. Here was the vocophone we had installed. It had warned us. But what could we do?

I looked blankly at Kennedy. He was equal to the emergency.

He calmly turned the switch.

Then, at the top of his lungs he shouted: "Help! Help! Police! They are strangling me!"

I looked at him in amazement. What did he think he could do—blocks away?

"It works both ways," he muttered. "Help! Murder! Police!"

We could hear the astonished cursing of the two men. Also, down the hall, now, we could hear footsteps approaching in answer to his call for help—Aunt Josephine, Jennings, Marie and others, all shouting out that there were cries in the library.

"The deuce! What is it?" muttered a gruff voice.

"The man in armor!" hissed Clutching Hand.

"Here they come, too, Chief!" There was a parting scuffle.

"There—take that!"

A loud metallic ringing came from the vocophone.

Then silence!

What had happened?

In the library, recovering from their crouch of surprise, Dan cried out to the Clutching Hand. "The deuce! What is it?"

REAL ESTATE NOTES

William J. Cozens of Newton and Newton Highlands has sold the new house and garage at 83 Carver road, Newton Highlands, together with 6800 square feet of land for Christine Tange of Abundant to Elizabeth Nye of Malden. Mrs. Nye buys for occupancy. The house is not yet assessed. Also lot No. 17 on Canterbury road, in the Eliot section of Newton, to Hugh C. Moses of Newton Upper Falls for Margaret C. Cozens.

The lot contains 7550 square feet of land. Mr. Moses will at once commence the erection of a single house on said lot. This will make the fifth house this same builder has erected on this tract of land. Edwin P. Seaver of New Bedford has sold a lot of land on Woodward street between Allen avenue and Upland street, containing 15312 square feet of land to A. F. Green of Boston. Mr. Green will build a residence for himself on this land shortly. The land is assessed on $1500. William J. Cozens reports the following rentals: 53 Marshall street, Newton Centre, for Louis H. Fitch of Boston to Martha S. Barney of Brookline and Allerton; 504 Centre street, Newton, for Mrs. Marie Kingsbury to David N. McKee of Brookline; 23 Clark street, Newton Centre, for C. A. Clark of Newton Centre to B. F. McMahon of Boston; 1218 Boylston street, for Frank Fanning of Newton Upper Falls, to Ernest H. Boyd of Newton.

RU-BER-OID
ROOFING
COSTS MORE - WEARS LONGER

We recommend RU-BER-OID because we know that it will give you lasting satisfaction. It costs more than ordinary prepared roofings, but it is cheaper by the year. Our customers who have used it know its worth and long life.

RU-BER-OID is solid through and through. It is permanently waterproofed with a compound of high-grade animal and vegetable substances. It contains no coal-tar or asphaltic oils that might crack in cold weather or run in hot weather.

RU-BER-OID Roofs applied more than 20 years ago are still giving perfect service without repairs. You end roof troubles when you use it.

The U. S. Court of Appeals has enjoined imitators from using the word "Rubberoid" or any similar name as the trade name or brand of their roofing.

There are many imitations of RU-BER-OID. We sell the genuine, which has the "Ru-ber-oid Man" (shown above) on every roll. Come in and examine it.

HAS GOOD IDEAS

As an indication of his fitness for the office of sheriff of Middlesex County Adelbert B. Messer of Concord, who is opposing Sheriff John R. Fairbairn for the Republican nomination, this week gave a most interesting interview to the writer, which gives a keen insight into the ability of Mr. Messer to cope with and handle the very perplexing question of constructive methods in penal institution management.

For twelve years Mr. Messer was an instructor at the Massachusetts Reformatory under the direction of Joseph Scott who is now at the head of the great penal institutions of New York state.

During those years Mr. Messer was a close student of the problems with which he was confronted every day and not only served as an instructor of the institution by day but devoted his evenings to teaching the prisoners in the evening schools of the institution.

MR. A. B. MESSER
Candidate for Republican Nomination for Sheriff.

"Long ago," said Mr. Messer, "I was convinced there should be a radical change in the management of the county penal institutions. Two years ago there were three bills introduced into the Massachusetts Legislature looking to investigations in Middlesex County. These bills were defeated.

"If I am elected sheriff which I shall be if nominated, I shall be the first to make a move to eliminate the causes which prompted the introductions of those bills.

"Middlesex County should have a county farm after the type of that great state institution at Bridgewater. With such a farm thousands of acres of land could be reclaimed and all of the prisoners confined in the county penal institutions could be given work. This work is absolutely necessary for the best interests of all the unfortunate who are confined.

"At the present time less than one third of the prisoners in Middlesex County are employed.

"Such a condition is bad for these unfortunate men, physically and mentally. They should all be given employment and the more out of door work the better, for the upbuilding of their constitutions in general.

"Constructive legislation is what is required. If the present supervision of the state board of Prison Commissioners is detrimental to the best management of the institutions and the welfare of the prisoners, it should be changed. And I believe this change should be made immediately.

"Employed in reclaiming waste lands the hundreds of prisoners would in no way interfere with the rights of organized labor they would not encroach upon the fields of such labor, and they would not be confined for months and years in idleness at the expense of the citizens of the county.

"To do this work new methods must be employed, the management of county affairs must be placed in the hands of younger men qualified to pursue this work, and the upbuilding of our county institutions along such lines would place Middlesex County in the foremost ranks of up to date penal institution progress throughout the country."

JITNEYS WIN

A case of long standing in the courts, in which action was brought by the town of Salisbury against a Jitney Bus Co. for operating cars without a permit has been settled, with the decision rendered in favor of the Bus Co.

The defendants were William C. Rich and Elbridge Currier of Haverhill and both were discharged on the complaint entered by the town of Salisbury.

The arguments advanced by the local company in Newton were used in the Salisbury case and the cases are said to be identical in many features, the local company having been found guilty recently in Newton for operating without a license. The decision in the Salisbury case was rendered by Judge Pettengill.

NEWTON LAD IN HAYTI

With the United States Marine Corps detachment landed from the U. S. S. Connecticut at Port au Prince, Hayti, for the protection of American and foreign interests in that war-torn little isle, is John F. Connaughton, of this city.

John, who is the brother of Miss Helen Connaughton, Emerald street, is not a regular sailor member of the Connecticut's crew, but is a fighting unit of that highly efficient military arm of the government service—the United States Marine Corps. Marines wear a distinctive military uniform, unlike the sailor, and they perform a soldier's duties while roving the seas, aboard ship. They are always first landed when trouble threatens, and they bear the brunt of the initial fighting. Usually, these soldiers of the sea are able to cope with any situation that may arise without having to call the army to assist.

Young Connaughton enlisted in the United States Marine Corps at its Boston recruiting station, 22 Tremont Row, July 16, last, and has since been in training at the Recruit Depot, Norfolk, Va. With 124 other recruits, in the midst of their training, he was suddenly ordered to embark on the battleship Connecticut for the Haitian expedition—his first tour of active duty, and, since it came so early in his enlistment, it is likely that his entire four years will be crowded with excitement and adventure.

HONORS FOR IMPERVITE

At the Panama-Pacific Exposition now being held in San Francisco, the Committee of Awards has just handed down its decisions for the many and varied products exhibited.

In certain instances, thousands of dollars have been invested in displays, but although a charming arrangement may attract the casual passer-by, the Judges must consider merit only. For Cement Waterproofing Compound, a careful series of tests were made, each one duplicating the other as regards proportions used and method of handling. As a result of these tests, Impervite proved so far superior that it was given the gold medal (highest award) without the chance of a quibble or doubt.

In 1909 the invention of Impervite was the climax of a brilliant research. All types of raw and finished materials were studied, and a very broad patent has since been allowed. Indeed the twenty-three claims cover such a wide scope that five years elapsed from the application for the patent to its final granting.

Up to the discovery of Impervite, practically all waterproofing compounds were based on the old Sylvester process of soap and alum. Our grandfathers used to take alum solution and soap suds and apply these alternately to a brick or masonry wall, where they reacted to form Aluminum Stearate (alum soap).

A booklet with full directions for waterproofing against pressure may be had on request to The Standard Paint Co., Woolworth Building, New York.

It's the easiest thing in the world to convince the average man that he is smart.

PARK SQUARE THEATRE—The first appearance outside of New York of the now-famous original cast of "Twin Beds" will distinguish the opening of the Park Square Theatre (formerly the Cort) under the new management of Selwyn and Company, when they will begin a season run on next Monday night, August 30th. This company, which critics and public agreed was the finest ever assembled for the playing of farce, includes Madge Kennedy, Ray Cox, John Westley, Leo Carrillo, John Cumberland, Alice John and Jane Seymour. The tonic wholesomeness of "Twin Beds" is due in part to the whirlwind rapidity of its action, and the genuine drama of its situations, but even more to the fact that it was written as social satire, gemmed with life-like characterization. It is both clean and funny because it is first human.

Mrs. Brown is interested in the pictures showing the Canning Club at work. She says with surprise that the girls are studying soil analysis in the chemical laboratory and she watches with interest all the processes of preparing the products until the pupils fill their cans with the result of their labors.

ARITHMETIC THAT LEADS TO HABITS OF THRIFT

She observes that there are many arithmetical problems to be solved in this work, and that when the cans are sealed and stored in the kitchen closet, the girls have a carefully prepared list containing the exact cost of each one, and thus are prepared both to sell their product at a profit in the open market, and to estimate the cost of canned goods in the family dietary.

In this connection it may be noted that Mrs. Brown is much impressed with the lessons in household accounts upon which these girls are constantly working; whether the task be one of bracing some point of laundry work, or of food preparation, or of sewing, she notices that lessons upon the costs of the articles used accompany each step of the work. She sees that the girls even read the gas meter and figure up the gas bill. As this fact of the training in economical management is borne in upon her, Mrs. Brown begins to look more seriously upon this exhibit, and there arises in her mind something that is nearly akin to fear and regret as she recalls the very slight calculation that she has ever made as to sums paid out in the Brown establishment.

SEWING

As the visitor to the exhibit studies the slides that show the girls at work in the sewing rooms, she sees that at first their attention is concentrated upon the fabrics upon which they are at work, and that lessons upon textiles precede and accompany all steps of the tasks. Linens, muslins, ginghams, and all the standard weaves are studied with the thought of their fitness to purpose, their durability and their expense. Here, as everywhere, problems in arithmetic accompany all stages of the work. These girls are made to count the cost through every step of their training, and Mrs. Brown can but see that an era of thrift in American life must follow such teaching as this.

COOKING

In the pictures illustrating the work in the cooking classes Mrs. Brown sees that the girl who has been appointed to act as hostess in giving a luncheon or a breakfast to the other girls of her division has to plan her menu so that the meal will be nourishing, well-balanced and limited as to price; that she does the marketing in person; that she cooks all the articles of food served at the meal; and that she presides at the table while another member of the class serves and later clears away. Mrs. Brown is especially interested in the slide that shows the invalid's tray that has been prepared by a pupil in the class, and in the lessons in dietetics which preceded the cooking of these dainty and attractive viands.

HOME NURSING

In certain photographs the girls are seen grouped in the emergency room where they are receiving training in home nursing from a white-capped nurse sent in from the city hospital. Some of the lessons are how to make a bed while the sick person is on it; how to ventilate the sick room and keep it at the right temperature; how to bathe the invalid; how to render first aid to the injured; how to act quickly and effectively in certain emergencies; how to "modify" milk and prepare the food of the invalid.

Right at this point we can best emphasize the value to any Ellen Brown of such a course in home nursing as is given in this school by relating the recent painful experience of a very successful teacher who had, however, no knowledge of home nursing, nor, in fact, of any of the duties incumbent upon the home-maker. According to her own story, she was thoroughly helpless and incompetent in all those matters pertaining to the household in which a home-making school trains girls to become helpful and competent. This lady was visiting at the home of a young relative who lived upon a farm, when suddenly her little friend was smitten with an ailment from which she suffered great agony and was, of course, totally unable to direct her household affairs. There were two small children in the family and the husband was just recovering from an illness. It was at first impossible to secure a maid or a nurse and the entire management of the household was suddenly thrust upon the shoulders of the visitor. She says: "Never in my life have I passed through so painful and so humiliating an experience. Here were human lives entirely dependent upon my ability to care for them, and I was totally incompetent to meet the situation. I could not prepare the baby's food or his mother's, nor could I even place an appetizing meal before the frail young father. I did not know how to care for the children or their mother and I could only perform in the most clumsy and bungling manner any of the countless household tasks that pressed upon me. In a word, there was almost nothing that I could do to contribute to the comfort of that pitiful little family. I looked at my helpless, incapable hands through tears of shame. Neighbors came to the rescue when they saw my incompetence and rendered assistance, until a maid and a nurse could be secured. The eighteen-year old Swedish girl who came to our relief, who had learned the care of children and something of cooking and household management in her home was, in that crisis, my superior at every point. We are never too old to learn and here in middle life I have learned a lesson through much mental agony that I shall teach to all my girl pupils, which is that every woman, no matter what her occupation or how large or how small her income, should receive as thorough training as it is possible for her to secure in the arts of home-making: cooking, home nursing, the care of children and household management."

THE HOME-MAKER MUST BE A WELL-READ WOMAN

The fear is sometimes expressed that the Home-making Schools will not sufficiently emphasize the development of a taste for good reading, but there is plenty of evidence that in these courses it is a recognized fact that the home-maker must be a well-read woman, whose mind is kept alert and vigorous in order that she may cope successfully with the greatest profession in the world. A course of reading is outlined which would equip her with such standards of literature and taste for the best reading as would make the woman in the home able to select the family reading intelligently, nor would she be imposed upon by the vociferous advertisements of the "best sellers."

As Mrs. Brown summarizes the result of her study of the slides she realizes that the young home-makers in this school, which is typical of many other progressive home-making schools, are learning something of the science of life, biology; of the art of right living, personal, household and civic hygiene; of the art and science of household management, as judged from physical, social and economic standards; and that they are receiving definite training also in the actual work of cooking, sewing, laundering, housekeeping and home nursing. We can imagine good Mrs. Brown saying as she turns away from the last slide, "My Ellen shall attend one of those schools and she shall teach me what she learns there."

AUTUMN IN THE GARDEN

The flowers droop their bright heads; the locusts have forgotten their unceasing chirp; the air is full of seed-parachutes flying hither and thither. The spider is sending forth his gossamer lines, while the goldenrod and aster, sure tokens of fall, are blooming everywhere. The birds have ceased their morning concerts the brooding season long since gone; for the ecstasy of spring is over. As we stand on the threshold of autumn one thought gives us consolation: The earth is the great storehouse for all the lives and loves of summer. To be sure, we have witnessed what appeared to be death and decay, but close and warm in their snug nests are the leaf and flower-buds for another year. Every plant has found a place for itself in the bosom of Mother Earth, where it may hide until the spring's resurrection. — Harriet Woodward Clark in The Country Magazine for September.

run a line of hose right into the building.

The chief and assistant chief go to all fires, except during the frequent brush fires in the spring and fall, and they are the only persons authorized to ring in more than one alarm. In a general way it may be said that one engine, one chemical, one truck and 2 to 4 hose wagons answer every alarm. Special danger points like hotels, schools, factories and mills call for extra apparatus. The city is divided into districts, so much apparatus being assigned to each box, more apparatus responding to a second alarm, and the whole department coming to a third. When an alarm is sounded in one district, the second alarm apparatus holds itself in readiness to answer any other first alarm which may come from that district as well as its own.

On returning to the station, all hands, call men and permanent men, turn to and clean the apparatus, wash the hose and hang it in the tower for 2 or 3 days to dry. A spare set being placed on the wagon for duty in the meantime. A record is then made of the alarm and other necessary details and the atmosphere resumes its usual serenity.

The machinery at fire alarm headquarters was all made in this city and is well worth a visit. It consists of a 10 circuit repeater, 10 pen register, controller, time stamp, switches for the different circuits and a battery of 40 cells.

The care of the fire alarm telegraph requires the service of three permanent men, acting under direct supervision of the chief. They keep the various lines in working order, run new wire where needed, and report at all fires, for such duty as may be assigned them.

The chief is a busy man. He not only must be in constant readiness to respond to all alarms, but must see that every piece of apparatus and equipment is in constant readiness for fire service, and that the fire alarm telegraph with its miles of wire is in good working order. Minor duties, such as the inspection of all electric wiring, the location of poles and wires by private corporations and individuals, the oversight of storage of inflammable and combustible materials come also within his province. In the execution of these manifold duties the chief travels about twenty miles a day on an average, and thirty miles is not an unusual trip.

The assistant chief with an office at West Newton has general charge of the clerical work of the department and is also in constant readiness to answer all alarms.

For all the above and for many other reasons, Newton should be proud of its fire department.

The confidence reposed in the department by the city government is well placed and is shared by every citizen who has given the subject any attention.

SHUBERT THEATRE — "Experience," the wonderful modern morality drama, in which the central theme shows Youth going forth into the world with Experience by his side as his best teacher, opens at the Shubert Theatre, Boston, Saturday night of this week. "Experience" is the greatest teacher in the world, and in this allegorical romance with the scenes laid in New York, the author, George V. Hobart, has written one of the strongest and most powerful of sermons, and a play which after all is one of the liveliest and certainly one of the most imaginative. In selecting the various temptations which confront Youth, Mr. Hobart decided to have them portrayed by beautiful and attractive women. Thus Intoxication becomes a most alluring blonde; Passion is a beautiful Oriental girl of dark attractiveness; the role of Pleasure is filled by a gorgeously gowned and fascinating young woman; and so on, for the various other vices and virtues which are to be met with in the world.

WILBUR THEATRE — The most phenomenal success in a musical way occurred at the Wilbur Theatre last Monday evening when F. Ray Comstock and Elisabeth Marbury presented "Nobody Home," the smartest musical comedy ever seen in Boston. It took the city by storm with its catchy, syncopating music and its cast of artists which includes Lawrence Grossmith, Adele Rowland, Charles Judels, Maude Odell, Laura Hamilton, Quentin Tod, Helen Clarke, Tom Graves, Carl Lyle, Coralie Blythe, Gertrude Waixel, Marion Davis, and others. The book of "Nobody Home" is by Guy Bolton and Paul Rubens and the music by Jerome Kern, the most successful of the present day composers. His has been a remarkable career in that every musical comedy or comic opera he has composed in the past three years has been a pronounced success. He has outdone all former triumphs in his work with "Nobody Home," the music of which has been sung and danced long before the arrival of the play itself.
